land. The University's code, which was unanimously approved by the committee of students, staff and faculty that created it, will require all University trademark licensees and all the companies they contract with to adhere to a set of a labor standards. The standards require that licensees: pay "a dignified living wage;" ensure "a safe and healthy working environment;" and protect employees' rights to form labor unions. Other provisions of the code call for protection from harassment and abuse on the job.

According to the current time line, the code, if approved by the University Senate and ultimately Frohnmayer, will go into effect as part of licensing contracts renewed or initiated this June.

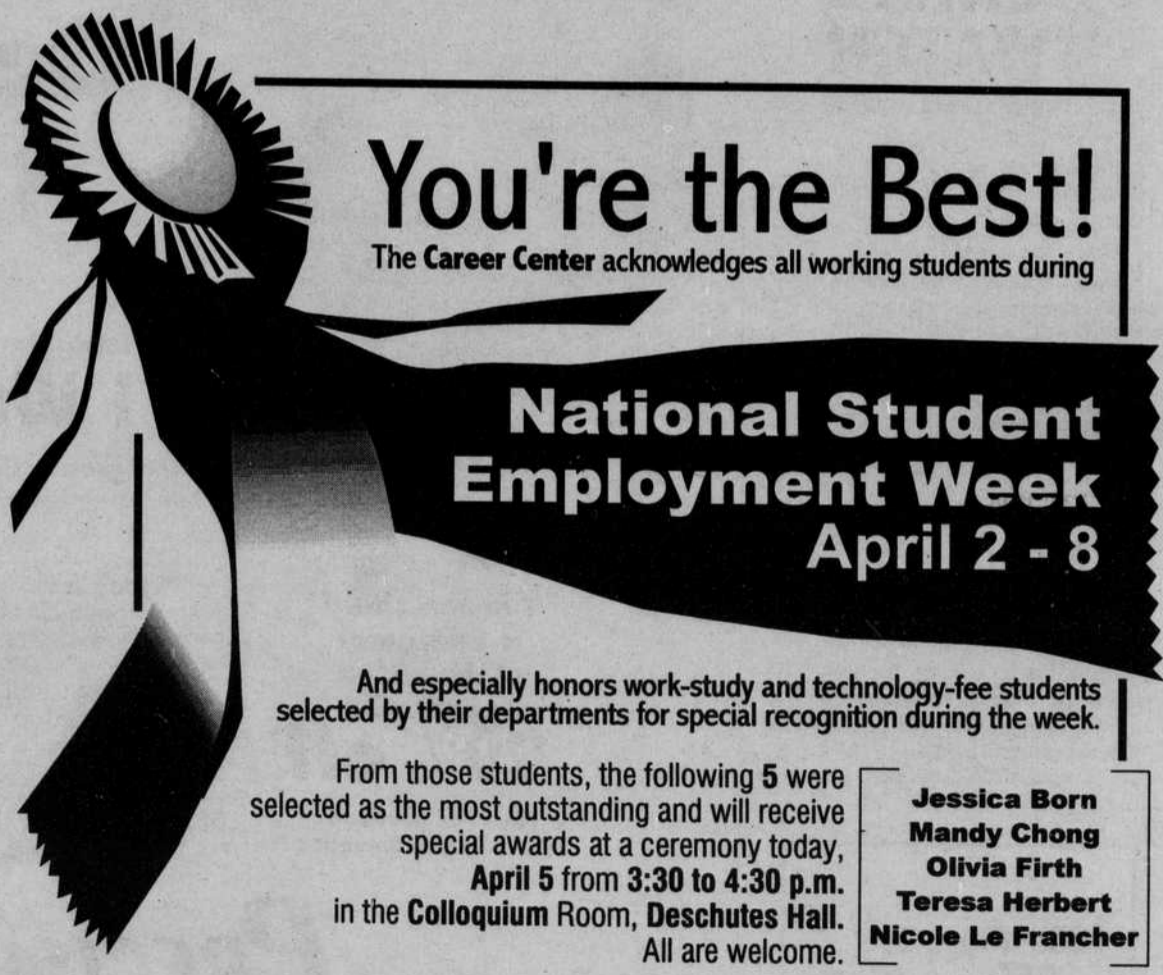

The code will not affect the University's contract with Nike in the short term because it does not come up for renewal until May 31, 2003, said Matt Dyste, University merchandising director.

In addition to submitting the draft to Frohnmayer, the Licensing Code of Conduct Committee recommended that the University choose the Worker Rights Consortium to monitor the conduct of its licensees.

While Frohnmayer has not committed to joining the WRC, he said Tuesday, "I'm usually inclined to adopt the recommendations of a committee that has done its work carefully."

"Given enough latitude, the University can steer its way sensibly and yet guided by a set of principles that protect us from unknowingly endorsing unsafe or exploitative labor practices," he said.

You're the Best!
 The Career Center acknowledges all working students during

National Student Employment Week
 April 2 - 8

And especially honors work-study and technology-fee students selected by their departments for special recognition during the week.

From those students, the following 5 were selected as the most outstanding and will receive special awards at a ceremony today, April 5 from 3:30 to 4:30 p.m. in the Colloquium Room, Deschutes Hall. All are welcome.
