Allen Hall facelift nears end

■ The $6 million renovation adds a courtyard, new entrance and high tech presentation rooms

Allen Hall has never looked so good.

The end of March marked the completion of the fourth phase of a four-year, $6 million renovation to the School of Journalism and Communication, which is now complemented by a new entrance and atrium.

The revitalization connects the two wings of the building on the first floor, bringing together four of the school's main student service centers, including the Willis S. Duniway Resource Center and the Carolyn S. Chambers Electronic Media Center. Additionally, a new dean's office was created on the first floor of Allen Hall.

"I think (the new entrance) is gorgeous," said junior business major Jordyn Barton, who works in the Duniway Center. "It really adds a lot of credibility to the school."
