hosting the Unity Games and a barbecue starting at noon on the Esslinger Intramural Field. Students are invited to participate in team competitions such as mastering obstacle courses. Free food will be available to all participants.

The cover charge for the entire weekend's events is $10 and tickets are available at the EMU Ticket Office.

BSU member and ASUO Student Senator Waweru Gatimu, a junior double-majoring in political science and general science, said that although he is concerned non-black students might not feel invited, he hopes they will attend the festival in an effort to broaden their cultural awareness.

“I believe that some students may feel excluded because of the title of the festival, but I feel that everybody here at the University of Oregon needs to get a full college experience,” Waweru said.

Marc-Daniel also said he hopes all students feel invited, regardless of the color of their skin or ethnicity.

“It's inclusive to everybody,” he said. “I think it's important because any time black people can display their culture we can really make people aware of what's going on.”

Health Consulting for College Men

April 10, 7:00-8:30 pm, EMU Ballroom

Why Men's Health?

- Men live much shorter lives than women and have higher risks for all 15 leading causes of death, including heart disease, cancer and diabetes.
- Despite these facts, most college men think their health is "excellent" and tend to ignore illness until they become disabling.

College Men DO Have Health Needs

- Most men do not receive regular health care until well into their 40s, dismissing their health needs to prove they're "real" men. And many take risks they shouldn't to show they're tough and strong.
- The truth is men do less - and know less - about their health than women. And, they have higher death rates from cancer and heart disease to show it.
