After missing all of last season to injury, Rashad Bauman (17) returned to his hard-hitting form — as Jason Willis can attest to.

catches for 146 yards) that he is indeed the go-to guy downfield.

At the tight end spot, Peelle proved that he is most deserving of starting status. Unproven George Wrihster showed good signs throughout the month of workouts, but he still has more to learn. LaCorey Collins never quite got going after starting late because of academic problems, and finished slow because of a hamstring injury.

Bellotti was pleased with the talent exhibited on both sides of the ball, but indicated that the influx of the 27 junior college and high school recruits will have a tremendous effect.

"We showed that we have some depth," he said. "But we need to get better, get more competitive and physical. And that'll happen in the fall certainly when some of the people we recruited come into camp."

The most notable recruit is obviously tailback Maurice Morris, who Oregon desperately needs if it wants to have a formidable offense. The Ducks leading rusher on Saturday was redshirt freshman Joe Broder, who compiled 43 yards on his seven carries.

"Our passing game is perfect right now," Fife said. "Once we get that speed factor in here, it's going to be a lethal offense."

Anchoring the defense has been linebacker Matt Smith, who seems poised to take over the role left by recent NFL draftee Peter Sirmon.

"We lost some guys from last year, so this spring started out slow," said Smith, who recorded four tackles on Saturday. "But I really saw a lot of improvement and we picked it up from the start. I think we're in good shape going into fall camp."

Many of the Ducks will stay in town this summer to work on individual needs before starting fall camp in August. Harrington sees these next few months as some of the most vital in terms of next season's success.

"This summer is a very good bonding opportunity for the team," Harrington said. "That plays a big part in how we're going to be. A close team off the field is a close team on the field, and that's what we need next year."

Such unity would give Bellotti even more reason to hope that his team can get back to where that custom-made watch around his wrist came from: The Rose Bowl.
