Carter defeated the Bulldog's No. 14 Matias Boeker in front of his home crowd in straight sets, 7-5(5), 6-3. Carter trailed 5-2 in the first set before staging a heroic comeback. He also found himself down in the first-set tiebreaker 4-1 but retaliated to win 7-5 before closing off the match with a convincing 6-3 second-set win.

The win was 51st-ranked, Carter's sixth of the season over a higher ranked opponent. He is now 17-10 on the season and holds the eighth spot on the school wins list.

In the third round, Carter will play Virginia's second-seeded Brian Valhaly, who disposed of Duke's Ramsay Smith yesterday. Valhaly is the fourth-ranked player in the country and is the Atlantic Coast Conference Player of the Year. Valhaly, a Georgia native, led the Cavaliers to a 16-9 record and an NCAA appearance.

Valhaly "is a real, steady and consistent player," Russell said. "It's going to be a tough match."

Other than Carter, three Pacific-10 conference players remain in the tournament, all of who are either Stanford or UCLA players.

Carter and Valhaly tangle today at 9 a.m.

Carter was not so fortunate in doubles play. The No. 24 team of Carter and freshman Leslie Eisinga lost in two sets to the No. 14 team of Maxim Belski and Francisco Rodriguez of Alabama.

The Oregon team led the first set 6-5 but fell in overtime, 7-6. Belski and Rodriguez took the second set, 6-2, and advance to play Pepperdine's Sebastian Graeff and Anthony Ross.

Carter and Eisinga finished the season with an 18-11 record and are third on the Oregon single-season win list and eighth on the career list.

While Eisinga has three more years of eligibility remaining, Carter's collegiate career will end with this tournament.

"He's learned how hard he has to work to earn every single point," Russell said. "It makes a big difference at this level, the willingness to stay in there as long as it takes to win the point."

Fan files suit after Wrigley Brawl

CHICAGO (AP) — A Chicago Cubs fan arrested in last week's brawl with the Los Angeles Dodgers at Wrigley Field filed a lawsuit Thursday against Dodgers' players and both teams, claiming he sustained neck and shoulder strains.

Ronald Camacho, a 32-year-old construction supervisor, was one of three men arrested on disorderly conduct charges following the May 16 melee that sparked when a fan allegedly struck Dodgers catcher Chad Kreuter in the back of his head and snatched his cap as Kreuter sat in the bullpen.

Camacho said Kreuter choked him while other Dodgers struck him. He said he was then carted off by security guards, held for three hours at the park and turned over to police.

The suit, filed late Thursday in Cook County Circuit Court, names all 19 suspended Dodgers players and coaches. It also accuses the Cubs organization of failing to provide adequate security, of falsely imprisoning Camacho and of failing to provide him with medical care.

"It is unprecedented for major league baseball players to go into the stands of a baseball park, acting in concert and with the intent to injure spectators," the suit said.

The Cubs have sent a letter to season ticket holders announcing that beer sales at Wrigley will be curtailed and security increased in response to the fight.
