No Vancouver officials could be reached for more information on Weavill's and Flynn's first court appearance and it is uncertain when the men will be released to the custody of Eugene law enforcement.

At Monday's press conference, Donaca said he divulge very much information about the case because the investigation is still in progress.

He did say that before the slaying Stafek and a few of her friends were hanging out at Stafek's residence in the Highway 99N area. Stafek left with Weavill and Flynn, Donaca said, and drove to a nearby Taco Bell.

At some point, Flynn left the automobile, and Stafek and Weavill ended up in the Bethel area parking lot where the shooting took place, Donaca said. Another eyewitness told police that Weavill pulled the trigger, Donaca said.

"We still have a lot of investigating to do on the motive," he said, adding that no more arrests are anticipated in the case.

Donaca said that there might be a connection in this case to a drive-by shooting that occurred about a year ago, but caused no injuries. Donaca said, however, that there is no indication that Stafek's murder is gang-related.

Flynn is the son of Mary Louise Thompson, who was convicted and served time in prison for arranging the 1994 killing of 18-year-old Aaron Iturra. Iturra was allegedly killed so that his testimony against Flynn could not be heard in a juvenile court case.

EPD Sgt. Ryan said on Monday that investigators are still interviewing witnesses who may have seen Stafek with Weavill before the shooting, and Ryan guessed that about 50 people have been interviewed since Thursday.

Weavill's and Flynn's arrests on Sunday came at about the same time Stafek's family and friends were gathering at Musgrove Family Mortuary in Eugene for visitation and viewing. Police contacted Stafek's father, Jon, late Sunday evening with news of the arrest.

"Obviously, we're pretty happy that we have [Weavill and Flynn] in custody," said Sgt. Pat Ryan of the Eugene Police Department's violent crimes unit in Monday's Register-Guard.

But one member of Stafek's family said the process for closure is far from over.

"It won't be closed until [those responsible] are convicted," said Casey Stafek's grandmother Susie Stafek.

Susie Stafek said she last saw her granddaughter on July 2, and she said that Casey did not indicate any trouble with any of her acquaintances. Casey had graduated in June from the Opportunity Center, a program through South Eugene High School.

"You read about [crimes like this] in the newspaper all the time," Susie Stafek said. "You just never expect it to happen to your family."

No other members of the Stafek family wished to comment on Casey's murder.

Stafek will be buried today at 2 p.m. in a private ceremony. Contributions may be made to the Casey Stafek Memorial Fund, in care of Musgrove Family Mortuary.

IntroDUCKtion

Director of the students attending IntroDUCKtion's Transfer Day. "About one-third to one-half of the students participating are from out of state."

For transfer students, the draw to the University from their previous schools ranged from academic needs to sports to personal reasons.

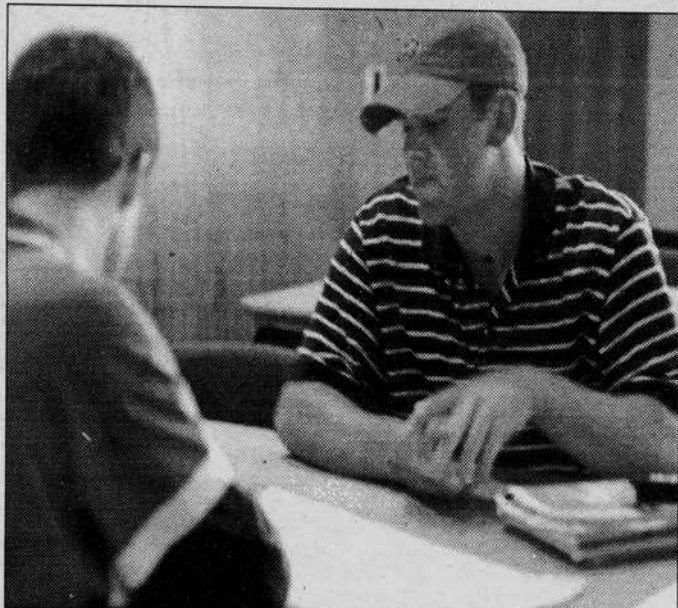

"This school has so much more to offer than Western did," Lori Hartt said as she waited to meet with her academic advisor. Hartt, a junior transfer student from Western Oregon University, made the move to be near her boyfriend, who will be attending the University's Law School in the fall.

For junior John Ellis, a transfer from Gavilan Community College in California, the reason to transfer was an opportunity to play on Oregon's golf team.

"I visited in October last year and it was in the 70s," Ellis said. Since his move to Oregon, people have continually asked him how he'll deal with the rain.

"It's just a little water," he said. After checking in, new students have the opportunity to attend workshops, such as "IntroDUCKtion to Academics at the UO," which cover everything from the University's learning communities to selecting classes. Meeting with advisers is also an integral part of the day.

"I'm hoping to get more in-depth advising from attending this event," said William Ivanoff, a transfer student from Lane Community College. Ivanoff will be had the opportunity to browse the Information Fair, a multitude of booths set up outside the EMU by different campus programs and organizations. While providing an opportunity for students to learn more about the services the University has to offer, it also gave campus groups a chance to educate and recruit for fall.

"The goal is to capture people interested in the outdoors the moment they set foot on campus," said Suzanne Hanlon, the assistant director of the University's Outdoor Program. "We're here promoting primarily for our summer activities and new student orientation trips."
