injury.

"We all know Joey and A.J. can play and they have done a great job," Bellotti said at the conclusion of the spring. "A.J.'s shoulder is sound and his elbow is sound, but they're not where he wants them to be. He will benefit a great deal from these next couple of months in terms of not being hit, and being able to work at a pace to get the strength and the natural throwing motion back."

Feeley seems to have followed coach's orders and says he is actually excited for the upcoming fall camp — a time of the year many players moan and groan about.

"A lot of people dread fall camp, but I don't — I look forward to it," Feeley said. "Any time I get right now until the beginning of the fall, I'm going to utilize every bit of it. Because every day I get stronger and every day I get better."

Harrington also is counting down the days until the real deal begins.

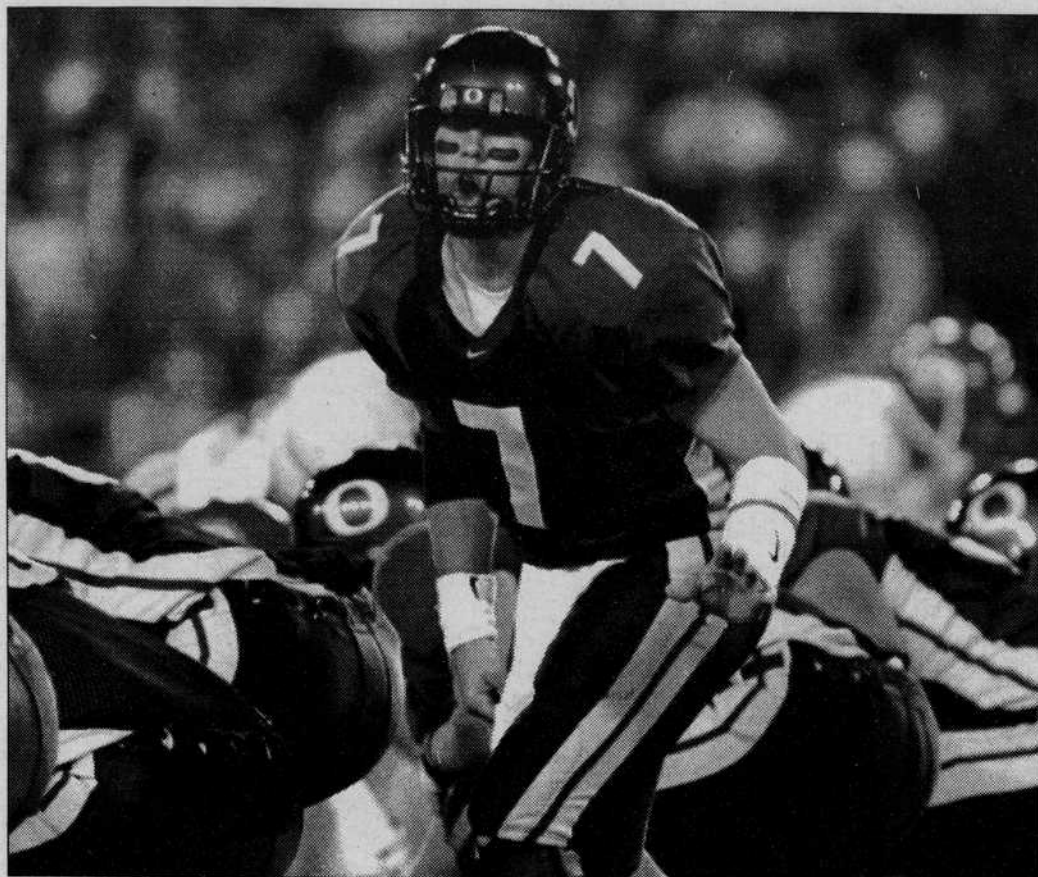

While Feeley is out for redemption after a year gone bad due to injury, Harrington is out to prove that he deserves to remain the starter. He capped a remarkable year by leading the Ducks to a 24-20 upset win over 13th-ranked Minnesota in the Sun Bowl on Dec. 31.

"Oh yeah, I'm definitely excited and have been getting kind of antsy," Harrington said. "I mean, I've been waiting for this for awhile."

So once again, the two quarterbacks head into fall camp with the intent of leading the Ducks onto the field in their home opener against Nevada on Sept. 2.

"The Minnesota game feels like yesterday, but it feels like forever ago in the same sense," Harrington said. "I don't know. I'm just ready to play. I've been sitting around long enough and I'm ready to get out there and get it done."

"My body's feeling great." But then again, so is Feeley's.

A.J. Feeley sat most of last season out with injuries, but says he's ready to show his mettle. But with Joey Harrington, who led the Ducks to a 24-20 defeat of Minnesota in the Sun Bowl, breathing down his neck, it could prove to be a real showdown.
