ternities any alcohol-related event at a fraternity house.

The EPD also puts on preventative talks to fraternities, sororities and residence halls, and has a segment during IntroDUCKtion in which officers speak about the zero-tolerance policy, Gilliam said. In addition, police talk about the rights of students living on and off campus.

Tsui said that the EPD has also been talking with Eugene municipal judges about adjusting ordinances to reduce fines for MIPs and replace them in part with educational sessions on alcohol abuse.

The Eugene Municipal Court next week starts such a program, said Court Supervisor Char Mauch.

For a first-time MIP, unlawfully allowing alcohol consumption on a private premises or furnishing liquor to a minor, 18-to20-year-olds who have not taken the UO course "Drinking Decisions" have the option of taking a one-unit course entitled BUSTED I (Beginning Underage Successes Through Educational Diversion) and paying court costs of $50 and a university fee of $35.

Fines and assessments would be suspended as long as the program is successfully completed, which requires that the individual pick up no new alcohol-related charges for four months and enter a guilty plea to the original alcohol charge.

The course covers health risks of alcohol abuse and goes into the various factors that contribute to problem drinking, said Miki Mace, administrator for the UO Substance Abuse Prevention Program.

"We're really trying to get on an educational platform as much as we possibly can," he said. "It doesn't help to have an adversarial type of relationship with students."
