Explosive device shakes Portland

PORTLAND, Ore. — An explosive device went off in a quiet neighborhood Wednesday morning, severely injuring a man about to get into his car.

The man kicked a sack in his driveway and a powerful explosion blew debris for several hundred feet, said police Lt. Mike Hefley.

Barry Hornstein, 59, was being treated at Legacy Emanuel Hospital for a severe foot injury, officials said.

A nearby elementary school was locked down for about two hours with 525 students inside as bomb squad experts checked the area to see if there were any more explosive devices.

None were found, Hefley said. Ten houses were evacuated. Portland television stations showed bomb experts on neighborhood rooftops.

Richard Price, who lives on a corner just a few houses down from Hornstein, was just getting out of the shower when he heard the blast about 10:30 a.m.

"It was a big boom, and I'm pretty deaf," Price said.

He said there's been some juvenile crime in the neighborhood, "but nothing like this. It's pretty scary, especially so close to the school," Price said.

He called 9-1-1 after he saw Hornstein lying injured near Hornstein's Volvo station wagon, KATU-TV reported. He said Hornstein was also able to call 9-1-1 himself.

Dixon said that even though Hornstein seemed to be severely injured, he was "conscious and talking and giving us instructions on how to help out."
