the chin-strap tight and be ready to go to battle. Nothing's going to be easy this Saturday, we're going to have to earn it.

"I did watch the Oregon game last week and they play with a lot of emotion. When you play Oregon, it's going to be a battle."

After Washington's three nonconference games, Tuiasosopo has passed for 646 yards and three touchdowns, and carried for 168 yards and two touchdowns. He runs the option as good as anyone else in the country.

Statistically, he played the best game of his career last season against Stanford, decimating the Cardinal defense with a school-record 509 yards and carrying his team to a 35-30 victory. Tuiasosopo connected 19 of 32 passes in that game for 302 yards and a touchdown, while rushing for 207 yards in 22 carries for two touchdowns.

But Washington head coach Rick Neuheisel believes that Tuiasosopo's best game was four contests before the Stanford matchup.

"A year ago against Oregon he played what might have been his best game," Neuheisel said. "I know everyone talks about the Stanford game and the numbers he put together, but against Oregon, he was 17-for-21, threw for over 200 yards and three touchdowns.

"He may not have had the total offense numbers, but there were very few mistakes and we are going to need that same kind of performance from him again if we are going to win."

Despite a 3-0 record and being considered for the prestigious Heisman Trophy, Tuiasosopo said he has not lived up to his own standards this season. He points to the Huskies' win over Colorado as an example, a game in which he threw two interceptions in the second quarter.

The buzz in Seattle is that Washington could find itself vying for a national championship this season — a feat that has little room for errors.

"I can play a lot better than I have been this year," Tuiasosopo
