From bored to board games

■ When all work and no play makes students dull, the Gaming Club provides a chance to have some fun

It seems the University has a club for pretty much everything. Club sports such as lacrosse and ultimate frisbee are probably the most recognizable and popular, but there are also options for people who want a little unstructured fun.

Among them is the University's Gaming Club. The club, which meets three times a month, offers its 30-odd members a chance to play board games, card games, role-playing games and even the occasional game of capture-the-flag.

Julian Leiberan-Titus, an undeclared junior and president of the club, said he became a member after a friend recommended it.

"I was looking for opportunities to game," he said. "And it turned out to be a lot of fun."

Leiberan-Titus also said that the club is always looking for new members and membership is easy to obtain.

"We're very open to anyone showing up to our meetings," he said.

Among some of the new things the club is trying are organized games that people may remember and want to play but don't have enough people to get them together.

"One of our members is trying to start up a video game football league," he said, "but one of my favorites is sword-fighting with foam-wrapped PVC pipes. We really beat on each other."

Joel Kenney, a sophomore computer science major and Gaming Club member, said that sometimes the games can be a little bizarre.

"We play this game where we smash little clay figures," he said with a laugh. "It sounds strange, but it's actually kind of fun."

Sarah Giffrow, a senior majoring in media design and the club's secretary and webmaster, said she joined her sophomore year because she was looking for something fun to do that "wasn't hard-core sports."

"The people here are nice and pretty much open to anything," she said.

Giffrow said the club is trying to expand its membership by putting up fliers and telling students about its existence.

"I feel like we're growing a lot and getting the word out," she said.

The club meets at 7 p.m. in the Carson Gold Room the first and third Saturday of each month to play games and once a month for an organizational meeting. For more information about the club and how to join, visit gladstone.uoregon.edu/~gaming.

Next week through the time machine

■ Entertainment highlights during the week of Oct. 22-28

In 1941, the animated Disney film "Dumbo" was released.

In 1947, the radio show "You Bet Your Life," starring Groucho Marx, premiered on ABC. In 1950, "The Jack Benny Show" debuted on CBS.

In 1955, the film "Rebel Without a Cause," starring James Dean, opened in New York.

In 1964, the Rolling Stones made their first appearance on "The Ed Sullivan Show." So many people complained, Sullivan said he would never invite them back. But the Stones made another appearance in 1965.

In 1965, the Beatles were made Members of the British Empire in a ceremony held at Buckingham Palace in London.

In 1966, the Beach Boys' song "Good Vibrations" was released. At that time, it was the most expensive single ever recorded, costing $40,000 to produce.

Also in 1966, "Georgy Girl" opened. It was the first movie in the United States to carry a "Mature Audiences Only" rating.

In 1973, the TV program "Kojak," starring Telly Savalas, premiered on CBS. It ran until 1978.

In 1975, Newsweek and Time magazines featured cover stories on Bruce Springsteen.

In 1982, the hospital drama "St. Elsewhere" premiered on NBC.

In 1995, singer Gloria Estefan performed for Pope John Paul II as part of the celebration of his 50th anniversary in the priesthood. She was the first pop star to receive a call from the pope to perform.
