

Programs Financing

The ASUO Programs Finance Committee has committed $1,205,837 so far for next year's program budget. That represents a 3.3 percent increase over last year's funding — slightly more than the PFC's 3 percent benchmark.

think the extended debate was accomplishing anything.

"I think it was the only viable option to end debate reasonably," he said. "They got the money they needed; it exists. If they're innocent, then it's not an issue."

He added that he didn't think the PFC had the right to make legal decisions.

Randy Newnham, vice chair of the PFC, voted in favor of the motion, but minutes after it passed, he was already regretting his decision.

Newnham said he wished he had proposed an amendment that would have given The Insurgent its money without putting it into a holding account.

"I was really torn ... I wanted to see the group funded, and I thought in this way they would get funded," he said.

Insurgent contributor and financial officer Willie Thompson strongly opposed putting the money in a holding account, saying that the PFC had authority to pass The Insurgent's budget.

"The job of the PFC is to decide whether or not The Insurgent, as a program, contributes to the cultural and physical well being of students," Thompson said. "I think that you all are people of sound mind and body, and can make an opinion on that."

PFC Chairwoman Mary Elizabeth Madden declined to vote on the budget because, she said, the chairperson does not traditionally vote unless there is a tie.

In other hearings, the Child Care

Subsidy began by asking for a 1.5 percent increase, but walked away with a 1.5 percent decrease.

Hours before the subsidy's hearing, ASUO Non-Traditional Student Advocate Kathleen Workman — one of the program's main coordinators — resigned.

Nonetheless, the show went on.

Weck insisted on a decrease in the group's budget because of the $40,000 it rolled over into the general surplus last year.

ASUO Accounting Coordinator Jennifer Creighton said the rollover came as the program transitioned from the Child Care and Development Centers (CCDC) to the Executive office.

Under the control of CCDC for the past five years, the subsidy had yearly deficits of between $10,000 and $20,000, she said. When the Executive took over administration of the program this year, it was careful to not spend too much money before it understood the program's prior spending habits.

Hearings for the Muslim Student Association, the Multicultural Center and the Oregon Future Lawyers Association were postponed until Thursday.
