with the school district's policies. "The issue is not whether or not the Boy Scouts are a good organization," Miller said. "That's a given. In a general sense, [the question is] how should the district spend its resources on a program that isn't open to all students."

Committee members will likely finalize their recommendation when they vote on whether to allow the Boy Scouts the ability to recruit during school hours at their Feb. 27 meeting.

The committee's suggestions will be passed on to the superintendent of the 4J district, Miller said. He then has the choice to either pass the recommendations on to the school board or do nothing with it. If changes in policy regarding the Boy Scouts of America are accepted by the school board, the decision will not take effect until next year.

Regardless of any decision the district makes, the community will continue to support the program, said Mike Marchese, assistant Boy Scout executive for Western Ore-
