Send us your pick-up lines!

Most everyone has been on one end or the other of a pick-up line. Sometimes they work, sometimes they fail miserably. But we want to find out which ones work and which ones don't, and we want to hear your stories. And doesn't springtime offer the perfect setting?

We are going to provide you with some of the more well-known — shall we say cliché? — pick-up lines this week just to get you started, but next week we want to print your top choices.

Either e-mail me at bcaffery@gladstone.uoregon.edu, or e-mail the Emerald through its Web site (www.dailyemerald.com). We want to hear from men and women, but keep it somewhat tasteful, please.

Here are the starter lines:

If I told you that you had a beautiful body, would you hold it against me?

Is your daddy a thief? He must have stolen the stars from the sky and put them in your eyes.

Are your legs tired? Cause you've been running through my mind all day.

Hey baby, what's your sign?

Hey, my friend over there wants to know if you think I'm cute.

If I wrote the alphabet, I'd put you and I together.

I lost my teddy bear. Will you sleep with me?

Do you believe in love at first sight, or do I have to walk by again?

Couples are usually looking for sex toys or movies they can watch together, she said.

Fascinated by this revelation, I decided to get some facts about sex shops from people who know what they are talking about. Jena Jolissaint, a University graduate teaching fellow who will be teaching the philosophy department's "Love and Sex" class this summer, said the fact that couples make up the largest demographic of sex shop customers "gives me hope for Eugene."

"This shows that there is an increase in communicating about pleasure," she said. "It's OK to ask for what you want from your partner. Things like sex toys are good because they portray sex as positive."

Dana Berthold, a former GTF for "Love and Sex," agreed.

"It's great that couples are the largest demographic," she said. "Traditionally, women aren't supposed to admit that they take sex into their own hands. A friend of mine gave her boyfriend a strap-on dildo for Valentine's Day. That's a huge step."

"If couples are going in and picking out vibrators together, that rocks!" Jolissaint added.

Later in the day, I headed to another sex shop. Sadly, its store policy doesn't allow me to print the name of the business. This shop was mainly an adult video emporium, with a few sex toys thrown in for good measure.

I walked through the front door, found myself looking at a six-inch long butt plug, and immediately noticed the Beach Boys' "God Only Knows" blasting over the stereo system. It was a pretty odd combination, to say the least.

I was greeted by a very nice employee in his early 20s. He informed me that his store specializes in adult videos and is largely frequented by single men from about 25 to 50. I asked him what it's like to work there.

"It's a great experience to work here. I've definitely learned a lot, and I would definitely recommend working here," he said. "I don't know if I'd do it as a career, though."

Couples, especially younger ones, are frequent customers at this establishment as well.

"We try to make it nice here," the employee said. "We don't cater to any one demographic. It's not just for single men or just for couples. Our goal is to make everyone feel comfortable."

Jolissaint was pleased by the positive focus on sex and feels that it's a shame most shops suffer the same treatment: They're stuck in seedy parts of town, windows covered with butcher paper. She believes that positive resources for sex still get combined with the negative.

"Hiding positive things and lumping them together with everything bad adds to the idea that sex is something to be ashamed of," she said.

Berthold felt the same way, adding that the people who zone sex shops into the "dirty" parts of town "aren't solving the problem, they're just saying, 'I don't want this in my backyard.'"

If I learned anything from my day of debauchery, it was this: Don't be afraid of sex shops. Sexually oriented businesses occupy a very legitimate and important niche in society that shouldn't just be filed under "smut."

They're a very useful way for couples to explore new things together. They encourage communication between the sexes. And most of all, they contain a wealth of information for anyone with even a mild interest in sexuality.

The next time you visit a store devoted to sex, take a good look around and try striking up conversation with one of the clerks. You might be surprised by what you learn.
