Grayson

After Grayson Hall's renovation was completed in September 2000 at a cost of $4.25 million, the University's history department was moved into the building from the department's former Prince Lucien Campbell Hall location.

Daniel Pope, the history department head, said while he is appreciative of the new office, he is doubtful the building should bear Grayson's name.

"I'm increasingly uncertain as more and more information comes out that seems to indicate [Grayson] has done things that might not be criminal but certainly seem dubious," he said. "Giving the money back is something the University should take very seriously, and if they do give the money back, I think they should probably change the building's name."

would never be part of a destructive protest.

"She is one of the most peace-loving, soft-hearted people I've ever met," said Leahy, who met Hager during IntroDUCKtion before their freshman year. "She's an intelligent person with an inquisitive and open mind."

On Monday, about 20 of the arrested protesters were charged and released, most of them with deportation orders, Susan Hager said. She added that she hopes her daughter will receive the same treatment.

Hager had left a month early for an exchange trip to Siena, Italy. In an e-mail to her parents, Hager said she would attend the protests, but she was sleeping in a safe place.

Although some of Hager's friends from Eugene knew she was going to Genoa for the protest, few got word of her arrest until her mother began calling to let them know.

Leahy said he heard Hager would be in Italy, but was learning of developments of her arrest and hospitalization for injuries as her parents got word.

The Hagers hope to be back in Oregon by Monday.
