

Rainy day blues

Thomas Patterson Emerald

Tuesday was a bad day, according to freshman Nick Pierce. In his first week in Eugene, he was kicked out of the residence halls for "illegal distribution of a controlled substance." He is pictured here waiting outside the housing office while attempting to be reinstated.

OUS chancellor recovering at home

The chancellor for the Oregon University System is expected to return to work in late October after undergoing angioplasty surgery Sept. 8.

Joseph Cox, OUS chancellor since 1994, is recuperating at his Eugene home.

Cox was doing yard work Sept. 8 when he noticed a sharp pain in his elbow; aspirin did not relieve it.

He was then rushed to Sacred Heart Medical Center, where doctors inserted a balloon-tipped catheter into one of Cox's arteries to remove blockage that was depriving his heart of oxygen.

OUS spokesman Bob Bruce said Cox's doctor cleared him to return to work four weeks after his surgery and expects Cox to be back at his desk, with piles of paperwork, soon.

"It's a difficult job," Bruce said of the chancellor's post. "I assume he will have a lot of catching up to do, but I understand he's making telephone contacts already. But his first concern and our first concern is his health."

Cox announced July 17 that he plans to retire in spring 2002 to devote more time to teaching and consultation for higher education.

Senate will vote on military construction bill

Sens. Gordon Smith, R-Oregon, and Ron Wyden, D-Oregon, announced that $8.3 million has been included in the military construction appropriations bill to build an Armed Forces Reserve Center in Eugene.

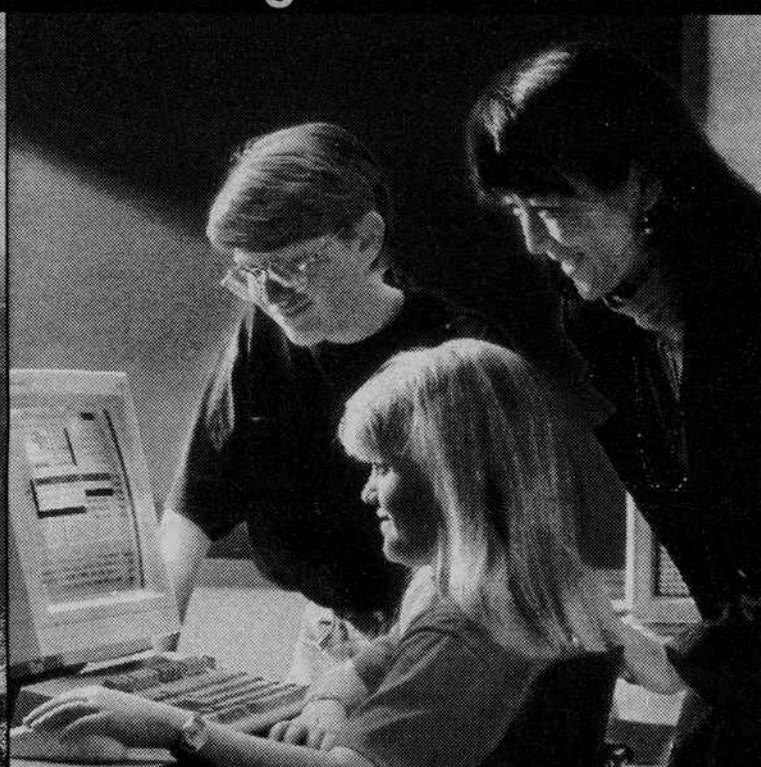

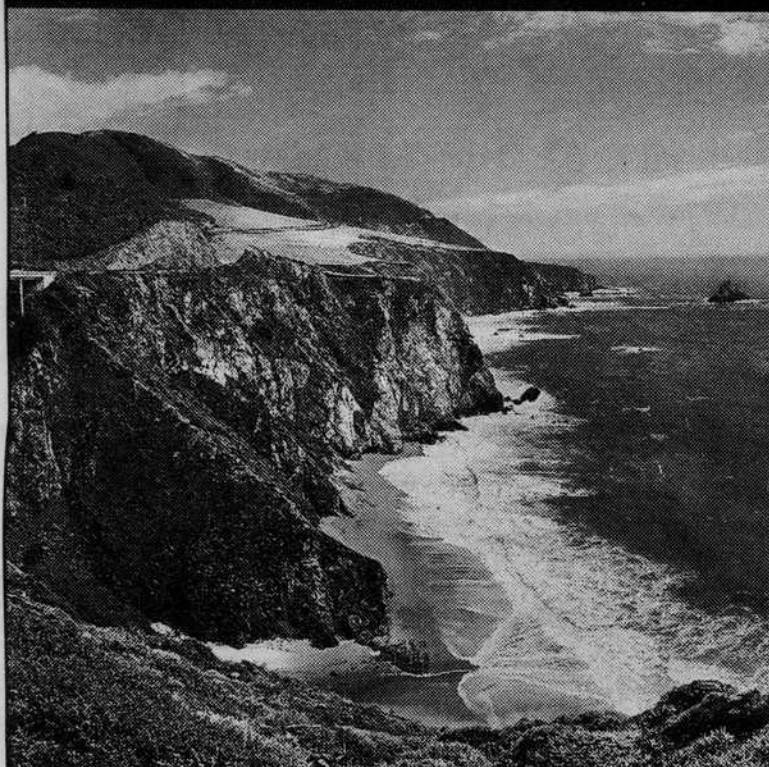

The facility would replace the Eugene Armory and two smaller armories in the area, and provide homes for units of the Army National Guard, the U.S. Marine Corps Reserve and the U.S. Navy Reserve.

The military construction bill passed an appropriations subcommittee today and is scheduled for a vote before the Senate sometime this week.
