Pac-10 slate should be exciting

■ The Pac-10 season rolls on with some key matchups and a nonconference game that won't disappoint historians

Oregon fans will be pinching themselves all over if California and Arizona can come up with wins this week. And along with the Cal-UCLA and Arizona-Washington games, one of the most storied rivalries returns to South Bend when USC takes on Notre Dame.

Arizona (3-3 overall,
0-3 Pacific-10 Conference)
at No. 15 Washington
(4-1, 2-1)

After UCLA handed the Huskies

their first loss of the season last Saturday, Washington will be looking to get back on track this week against a struggling Arizona squad.

"We need to fix what broke against UCLA," Washington head coach Rick Neuheisel said. "Most important to me is that we gather our confidence, bring back our swagger, and see if we can't continue to improve and make this season a great one."

The Huskies' quarterback tandem of Cody Pickett and Taylor Barton are both nursing injuries, and it is questionable which one, if either, will play.

Even with Washington's quarterback troubles, Arizona will have a tough time snapping its current eight-game Pac-10 Conference losing streak.

Arizona head coach John Mack-ovic has not given up on the season, though.

"We have a lot of work to do, and I still believe that we can get to a bowl game," he said. "But we have to win three out of the last five games against good teams."

After Washington, Arizona faces USC, Cal, Stanford and Arizona State.

California (0-5, 0-3)
at No. 4 UCLA (5-0, 2-0)

Expect this game to be quite a one-sided affair, because this contest pits the worst scoring defense in the Pac-10 against the fifth-ranked scoring defense in the country. Cal has given up 218 points, while UCLA has allowed only 60.
