what he's going to give you. And then you got a little guy like me that'll come in and dart through there or bounce off a tackle or drop back to pass it. You really don't know what to expect from us.

"We kind of have teams on their toes."

Getting Stanford (3-1 overall, 2-1 Pac-10) on its toes will not be an easy task for Morris and Smith. The Cardinal are second in the conference in rush defense, allowing just 89.5 yards per game on the ground.

"They like to bring a lot of people up front," Smith said of the Stanford defense. "They're a good team all around. We're just looking to find creases and run like we know how to."

Stanford also knows a thing or two about running the football. Brian Allen (95.5 yards per game) and Kerry Carter (61.2 ypg) have led the Cardinal to 201.2 yards per game this season, second in the conference behind DeShaun Foster and the UCLA Bruins (222.8).

In fact, Oregon and Stanford are the only teams to have two running backs among the conference's top-10 rushers.

Morris and Smith have combined to lead the Pac-10 with 4.8 yards per carry. And they are the only teammates to rush for 100 yards in the same game this season.

"When you get running backs who can run the holes, that's one thing, but when you get running backs who can create the holes for themselves, that's a whole other thing," Line said. "That just adds so much to your offense and gives you so much balance."

A transfer from Tennessee, tailback Onterio Smith (left) has rushed for four touchdowns in the Ducks' first six games, and is averaging 6.3 yards per rush. Adam Amato Emerald
