News brief

Jewish students present Culture Night

Israeli dancing and the scents of matzo ball soup and potato pancakes will fill the Fir Room tonight for this year's Jewish Culture Night.

From 6 to 9 p.m., students from the Jewish Student Union and Hillel will share their culture by presenting speakers, participating in traditional dances and serving food from different parts of Jewish culture, such as Passover.

Participants will also see a Klezmer band perform. Klezmer incorporates music from pre-World War II Europe, Jewish Student Union director Shainah Falk said.

Religious studies professor Judith Baskin will also speak about the Harold Schnitzer Family Program in Judaic Studies, which began at the University last year and which she directs.

Throughout the night, members of the Jewish community will have the chance to share their culture and history with others, Hillel student life coordinator June Harris said.

"Living in a predominantly non-Jewish world, this night helps people associate with students raised in Jewish homes that have cultures not necessarily known to others," she said. "Not only is it an opportunity for Jews to share the culture with other Jews, but also with the community."

ASUO Student Sen. Mary Elizabeth Madden said student groups are allowed to use their budget for program money, office supplies and any workshops, conferences or other events. They are not, however, allowed to use the money for food, fundraising or personal expenses.

When a group violates spending guidelines, the invoices are temporarily turned over to the Office of Student Conduct and evaluated, and Creighton reviews the guidelines with the student group.

The group's fundraising money is then used to reimburse the fund for any violations.

She added that the complexity of the system teaches student group leaders how to budget and how to organize events.

"Our system is complicated," she said. "That is what makes the student fee unique. It gives students leadership responsibilities."
