what it was all about and then I realized how big it was." As is customary when players get older, it's now Moretti's turn to tell stories about last season to his younger teammates who didn't experience it. Stories are a big part of what gives the Civil War its historical feel.

Just like the previous 104 contests, Saturday's 105th affair will again be heated and will no doubt include moments that will turn into tales in the years to come.

"I didn't know anything about it. I just heard stories and a lot of them weren't good," said Allan Amundson, a San Rafael, Calif., native. "You always hear the bad stuff."

For those Ducks who are Oregon residents, like Eugenean Chris Tetterton, they don't need history lessons or motivational tactics. Tetterton sees the immediate difference in his out-of-state teammates when they take the field against the Beavers.

"As much as they say, 'Oh, it rains in Oregon too much' and 'I'm not an Oregonian, I'm a Californian,' that's all B.S.," Tetterton said. "They come here and they know. Their first game, it all changes. They become an Oregonian."

So, as freshman defensive end Igor Olshansky prepares to play in his first Civil War, he claims that he feels no ill will toward Oregon State.

"I don't have any hatred right now," Olshansky said.

Think the San Francisco native ever will?

"Talk to me after the game," he said with a smile.

Schedule

The Ducks have never had eight home games in a season, and have not played 12 games in the regular season since 1994.

Construction on Autzen Stadium, which will expand the seating capacity from 41,698 to 53,800, is set to begin after the Civil War game this Saturday.

"We are thrilled to offer a schedule that allows our fans to enjoy an unprecedented eight home games in a newly expanded Autzen Stadium," Athletic Director Bill Moos said. "A slate featuring strong Pac-10 competition will be blended with several non-conference foes that should attract national attention."

Oregon begins Pac-10 play at Arizona on Oct. 5 before heading back to Pasadena, Calif., for the second-straight year to face UCLA at the Rose Bowl. For the third-straight season, the Ducks are scheduled to visit Pullman, Wash., to battle the Cougars. And after a one-year hiatus, the Oregon-Washington rivalry will resume with the Huskies visiting Autzen.

For future reference, Moos announced that Oregon reached an agreement for a home-and-home series against Purdue in 2008 and 2009. A verbal agreement has also been reached with Colorado (a potential opponent at the Fiesta Bowl this season) for the 2012 and 2013 seasons, as well as Army in 2009 and 2010.

them some confidence which they carried over into the second half."

Massachusetts led for much of the second half, although the lead changed five times in the last seven minutes. UMass took the lead for good on a Micah Brand lay-in with 1:09 left.

Oregon was killed from the outside Tuesday night. Crooks scored a team-high 13 points, while guards Eric Williams and Raheim Lamb scored nine points each.

The Oregon defense was able to neutralize Massachusetts' big men, and held Rhymer to only seven points after he netted 16 against Marist on Saturday. Oregon post Chris Christoffersen continued to shine, as he scored 12 points and grabbed 11 rebounds for his first double-double of the season.

"He had a good game, but he got a little fatigued out there," Kent said. "Overall it was a learning experience for him."

The Ducks will return to the West Coast to face Portland in the Rose City on Sunday. That game will tip off at 3 p.m.
