News brief

Fair to raise awareness about eating disorders

To kick off Eating Disorders Awareness and Prevention Week the University Counseling Center, Health Center, Health Education staff and peer educators will host a "Body Positive Fair" from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. today in the Fir

Room of the EMU.

The goal of the fair is to promote self-esteem and positive body images, and it will include tables with handouts on how to help a friend with disordered eating. There will also be a table featuring soothing activities, such as making eye pillows and positive affirmation bookmarks.

Health Educator Kristen Olmos with the University Health Center will be teaching how to eat healthily without dieting.

In addition to a Barbie mannequin that will be on display to represent how bodies are portrayed inaccurately by the media, prizes will be given away, including free massages to gift certificates to the University Bookstore. For more information, call 346-2728.

Now, three years after winning the race, Young has relocated down Interstate 5 to be a University senior and aspiring law student who has spent five years fighting for student interest — and is currently one of two student members on the Oregon State Board of Higher Education.

As president of PSU, Young successfully advocated for numerous student interest issues including keeping students on the Oregon Health Plan, running a successful bone marrow drive for a needy student, advocating for lower student loan rates and establishing a 24-hour computer lab and library access at PSU.

"It's your job as a student to create an environment of opportunity," he said. "When I got into a position of power, I did not waste my time."

Young has continued to fight for student interest while serving on the Oregon State Board of Higher Education. Consisting of 11 members, the board is the governing body for the seven Oregon University System campuses. Members are appointed by Gov. John Kitzhaber and confirmed by the Oregon State Senate. Nine members are appointed for a four-year term and the two student members are appointed for a two-year term.

The 22 year old was appointed to the board in June 2000 and has been an active member since his first day. He saw his position on the board as an opportunity to be the voice of Oregon students, and it was his goal to make his voice heard.

"I wanted to be taken seriously," he said. "Students have not been taken seriously, and I have worked to change that attitude toward students."

As a member of the State Board of Higher Education, he has successfully fought for student interest. He advocated for increased state investment in the OUS and supported permanent Inter-Institutional Faculty Senate and Oregon State Association report items on the OUS board agenda.

Erin Watari has worked with Young on the board and has known him since he was a freshman at PSU. Watari said working with Young has been educational and enjoyable.

"He's so great. He has such heart and true passion, and he's always working in the best interest of preserving public higher education," Watari said. "He has so much passion for the board. To be able to work with somebody like that has been so educational."

Young and Watari successfully lobbied to get student representatives on the OUS chancellor search committee. As members of the committee, students participate in the screening and selection process to find the next OUS chancellor. Young was honored when he was selected as a student participant.

John Wykoff, a former lobbyist for the Oregon Student Association, said Young and Watari are the most effective student members to be on the board in years.

"They have served the students of Oregon extremely well," Wykoff said. "They have been very effective advocates."
