Time to REMEMBER

■ The Jewish community on campus began its annual ritual of reading the names of Holocaust victims Monday evening

Approximately 6 million people died in the Holocaust, too many names to call out even in a 24-hour period. But on Tuesday evening in the EMU Amphitheater, the Jewish Student Union will have attempted to announce as many of those names as possible. To honor Yom HaShoah, or the Holocaust Memorial, which is a worldwide celebration for those who died in the Holocaust, JSU has been holding a ceremony reading the names of those who passed since the group formed at the University in the 1970s. The Holocaust Memorial marks the first day of the Shoah Remembrance Week, Shoah being the Hebrew word for Holocaust. "Other universities and student groups have their own way of celebrating the Holocaust Memorial, but this is how we choose to do it," JSU Co-Director David Kent said.

Student arraigned, doesn't enter plea

■ A grand jury has to decide whether to indict the University student on multiple counts of burglary and theft by April 15

University student Benjamin Raymond Kelley, 25, appeared before a brief arraignment hearing Monday, where a judge set an April 15 deadline for a grand jury to decide whether to indict him.

Kelley, wearing a green county jail jumpsuit and brown sandals, said he planned to hire his own attorney for his future legal proceedings. He did not enter a plea at the hearing.

KELLEY

Kelley was arrested Friday on three counts of first-degree burglary, three counts of first-degree theft, one count of second-degree theft and one count of unlawful possession of a destructive device.

He allegedly stole between $2,500 and $3,000 in women's underwear, bathing suits and other personal mementos from three rooms in H.P. Barnhart residence hall, where he also lives.

The first-degree burglary and theft charges are felonies.

Kelley reportedly became extremely intoxicated late Thursday night and was taken to Sacred Heart Medical Center.

He returned to the residence hall early Friday and allegedly stole clothing and other items from three rooms, in some cases while the female residents were sleeping inside.

Kelley was arrested Friday morning and spent the weekend in jail waiting arraignment.

Eugene Police Department spokeswoman Pam Alejandre said that, after interviewing a number of Barnhart residents, EPD believes the case is an isolated incident. She said no evidence shows any connection between Kelley and the campus assaults or masturbation incidents outside other residence halls.

West said anyone with information regarding these or other incidents should call DPS at 346-5444 or EPD at 682-5121. Other information is available on a special DPS hotline at 346-5692, which will be updated as additional information becomes available.
