been following the traffic stops of police officers based on race. He also said the City Council should also focus on discouraging EPD from singling out youth.

Kelly said he believed University students have been under-represented in the City Council in the past because they do not come to the meetings and voice their concerns. Stewart suggested they arrange a student board to approach the council with any issue.

Kelly said although he is not a student, he wants to represent them as well as all members of Ward 3.

"I don't feel that distant from my student days and, unfortunately, the same issues we are talking about are the same issues I was dealing with 30 years ago," Kelly said.

Stewart said he may not have the experience, but he wants to represent the students because they make up 25 percent of Eugene's population. He said he believes a student can give voice to University concerns.

"When I decided to run for City Council, I realized I didn't know everything and I don't have a lot of experience," he said. "But I have an open mind, a sharp mind — not to brag or anything."

you mean to honor, the polite thing to do is stop doing that which offends."

While members of the University law school prepare to submit the resolution, the National Collegiate Athletic Association is reviewing the use of American Indian symbolism with athletic teams. The NCAA Minority Opportunity and Interests Committee has been directed by the NCAA Executive Committee to review the use of American Indian mascots, nicknames and logos by NCAA member institutions.

Rochelle Collins, director of professional development for the NCAA, said the decision to review the issue was made during the spring executive committee meeting in April 2001. Collins said the Minority Opportunity and Interests Committee will submit a report of its findings during the executive meeting in October 2002.

"It is in a fact-finding stage right now," Collins said. "A report will be submitted in October and the committee will either request to have more time to study the issue or it will submit a final report of its findings."
