ened society you've got to have a strong education system. I'm very optimistic about Oregon's potential," he said.

"A university system as a whole has to provide access to those who can benefit from higher education," said Hoff, who acted as senior vice chancellor of the California State University System from 1993 to 1997.

Richard S. Jarvis

Richard Jarvis was the first and only chancellor of an online university system, the United States Open University, which will stop operating after its current semester.

Though the university system was not financially viable, Jarvis said he picked up valuable lessons about what students want and need.

"I really learned to focus on students," Jarvis said. "Much of the future of higher education will be hybrid" with online courses.

Prior to Jarvis' experience with the online university, he served five years as chancellor of the University and Community College System of Nevada.

He said one of the pleasures of being a chancellor is working with people on all levels of education — "some of whom want to pick your pockets," he said.

Jarvis said he was attracted to the job because Oregon institutions have a solid reputation "among the chancellor group" and because he loves the West.

go in there with everything — the continuous punching, constantly moving around."

Hale said he fatigued during last year's event because he was nervous and underestimated the length of the rounds. This year, he'll approach the fight differently.

Junior Mike Weston, another veteran of last year's event, said he will also approach his match differently. After watching a tape of last year's bout, which he called "my first fight since second grade," he will try to adhere more to boxing fundamentals.

Last year, "I was sloppy," he said. "You always have to exhale when you punch. If you don't, you get too tired."

Nair has been training with a collegiate boxer and said she now understands that the mental aspects of boxing are just as important as the physical. However, no matter how hard rookie boxers train and spar — or watch Rocky movies — nothing can successfully recreate the pressure of the ring.

Senior Jamey Skeelee said she has an escape plan.

"If worse comes to worse, I can always lay down and say 'I give up,'" she said.
