APASU lets theater, hip-hop, rap get 'the juice flowing'

■ Asian-Pacific American Heritage Month's main event features hip-hop artist Thai and 'hereandnow' theater group

For the fourth time in a decade, the Asian-Pacific American Student Union presented "hereandnow," an Asian American theater group from Los Angeles, as the headliner of its main cultural event at the EMU Ballroom on Saturday evening.

APASU's "main event," held in honor of Asian-Pacific American Heritage Month, opened its doors at 6:20 p.m. to more than 100 students and community members — many of whom were fans of band Pocket Face, hip-hop artist Thai and hereandnow.

Pocket Face, originally from Eugene, kicked off the evening with three of its members wearing wigs and hats and performing one drummer short.

"They've been there for me before," said Paul "Pauly Paul" Wright, frontman for hip-hop group Frunt Row Joe and last-minute replacement for Pocket Face. After the members of Pocket Face played a few songs under the comedic pseudonym "Rocket Face," they gave Wright the spotlight, and he filled it with a combination of rock, rap, beat-boxing and light-hearted humor.
