Kapek leads the nation by 0.09 meters in the triple jump, but if history is a guide, Kapek should fare well in the national final of the event. The sophomore from Houilles, France, is a two-time under-23 French champion. He has performed well at big meets this season, most recently winning the Pac-10 meet with a leap of 55 feet, 3 inches.

The fate of the Trojans at the NCAA meet may very well rest in the hands of a Frenchman.

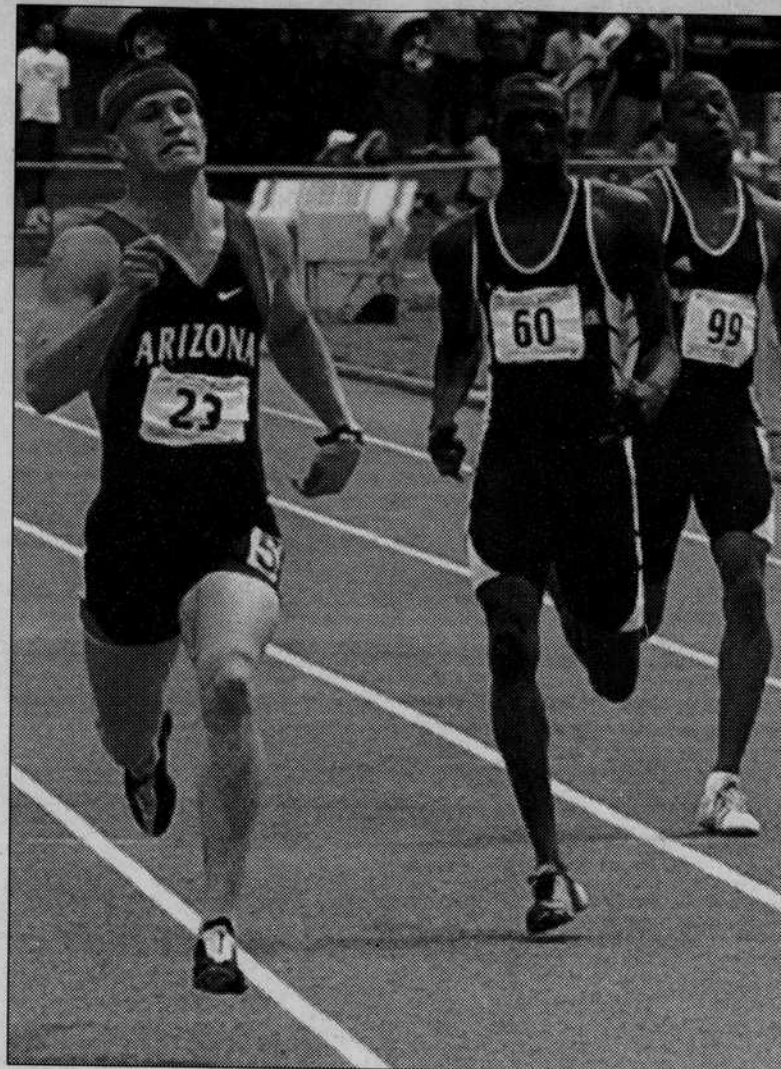

Pullman = Thrillville?

Mooberry Track in Pullman, Wash., saw some thrilling finishes on Sunday that wowed the Pac-10 Championships crowd. The first came in the 110 hurdles, where Oregon's Harris battled with USC's Ryan Wilson right to the tape. Wilson edged Harris by a mere 0.01 seconds.

The second close race came in the 400, where two in-state rivals battled for the top spot. Arizona's Mike Kenyon and Arizona State's Seth Amoo went neck-and-neck until the final stretch, where Kenyon got to the finish line 0.50 seconds quicker.

"I had it stuck in my mind that no one is beating me this year," Kenyon said. "I exit my senior year as a champion and that is awesome."

IX regulations, but I can't see anything catastrophic coming from bringing baseball back to Eugene.

Bring another women's sport into the varsity ranks, but the University, its fans and future students need baseball, which has been sorely missed since it was cut in 1981.

I understand that this is "Tracktown, USA," but a new baseball field wouldn't take any glory away from historic Hayward. Oregon needs to bring baseball back so fans won't have to travel to Corvallis to take in their fix of collegiate baseball and sweet smelling leather, chatter of teammates and the crack of the bat — which, unfortunately, has been replaced by the ping of metal, but we'll leave that issue for another column.
