Junior Mary Etter said she was disappointed with her third-place discus performance in the Pac-10 Championships.

Marie Davis was Oregon's savior in 1999, winning the 3,000 with a time of 9:38.8.

However, it hasn't always been this way for the Ducks.

Oregon saw unprecedented success in the early 1990s, with the Ducks winning 14 events from 1991-93. Those numbers coincide with Oregon's last Pac-10 Championships when head coach Tom Heinonen's squads won the 1991 and 1992 titles. In 1993, the team took second, just behind UCLA.

Goin' out in style

Only one senior made the trek to Pullman for the Ducks, and Jenny Kenyon didn't disappoint.

The Newbury Park, Calif., native scored four points in the heptathlon a week before the rest of the team showed up in Pullman. Then, Kenyon, who missed an NCAA provisional mark by six points in the heptathlon, finished her Oregon career by earning one point in the 100 hurdles after finishing eighth.

Oregon does have two other seniors on its roster, although one will be back next season. After redshirting this year, Niki Reed will team with Holliday to form a lethal one-two punch in the pole vault.

The other? Daisy Pressley, a two-year letterwinner for the Ducks after coming over from Chemeketa Community College during her junior year, ends her Oregon career after failing to earn a Pac-10 qualifying mark.

Final thoughts

Junior Mary Etter finished third in the discus, but wasn't happy to earn only six points for Oregon. But she's confident she will succeed when she goes to Baton Rouge.

"I'm kind of upset about Pac-10s. But I'm maybe thinking I can knock them off at nationals," she said about the event's one-two finishers, UCLA's Chaniqua Ross and USC's Cynthia Ademiluyi.

Then there's Holliday, again giving her appraisal of the Pac-10 experience. This time, Kirsten Riley, who finished tied for fourth in the pole vault, gets Holliday's praise.

"I'm so proud of her," Holliday said. And finally, when looking at the score-sheet, analysts can see the athlete who really got Oregon started in the right direction at the Pac-10 meet.

"Amanda Brown is really the one who got things going for us," Heinonen said about the junior long and triple jumper.

Brown finished eighth in the long jump and sixth in the triple jump in Pullman.
