Fire of the ABA and played in three games averaging 11.7 points per game. In the 2001-02 season, Wright headed overseas to play for Werthersee Piraten in Austria.

In the 2001 NBA draft, Bryan Bracey, who led the 2000-01 Oregon team in points (18.6) and rebounds per game (7.1), was selected in the second round as the 58th pick overall. Also drafted in the supplementary draft of the National Basketball Development League by the Fayetteville Patriots, Bracey was signed by Bnei Hertzliya in Israel.

He left the country in April because of security questions from the military conflicts in the region, according to www.eurobasket.com.

Flo Hartenstein, a force on the inside when playing for Oregon from 1997 to 2001, signed a two-year contract with Avitos Giessen in his native country of Germany. He is the team's starting center.

Other former Ducks Julius Hicks, David Jackson and Anthony Lever also expect to play overseas starting this summer, and their former coach is pleased that so many of his former players continue to pursue the sport.

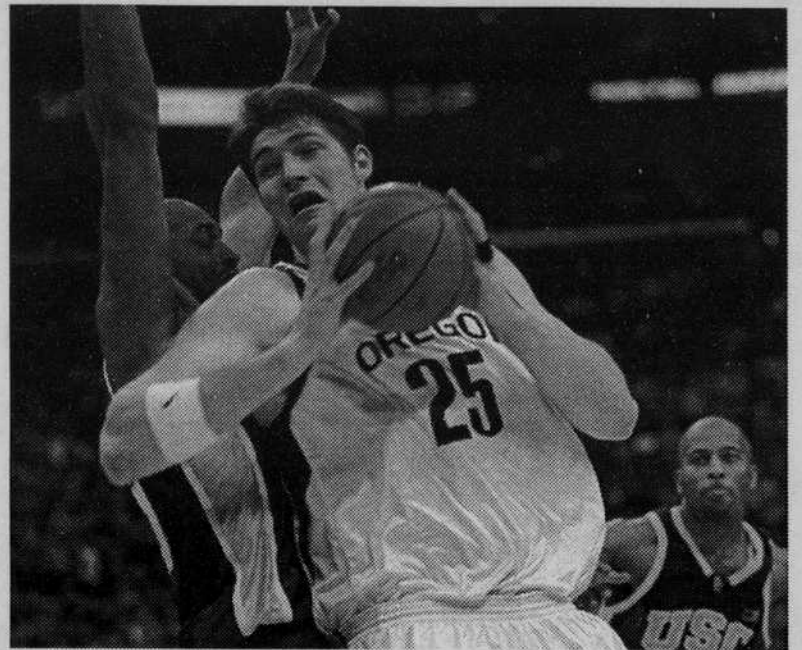

"The fact that you've got players that are at a high caliber, that are playing professionally overseas — that's a plus because it shows that players can come here and have success and continue their careers," Kent said.

Kent said that his biggest enjoyment is seeing his players walk away from the University with a degree.

"There are a couple that are very close that went overseas, and I will have a greater thrill of enjoyment when they do come back and get their degrees from the University of Oregon," he said. "Those who have gone through the University, not wasted this wonderful opportunity, received their degrees and are now playing professionally overseas — that's a big enjoyment for me."
