UO summer session enrollment increases from previous years

School's out for summer. Well, sort of.

While some students pass time soaking up sun, traveling or working, about 8,500 students will spend their summer in the realm of academia.

Summer session Director Ron Trebon said the 700 or so courses offered this summer will attract about 7,200 students to campus with another 1,300 earning credits overseas. These numbers are up by approximately 800 students compared to this past year, Registrar Herb Chereck said.

With cheaper out-of-state tuition, many non-residents flock to Eugene for summer classes, Trebon said.

About 30 to 35 percent of summer students are non-Oregonians, a larger proportion than during the standard school year, Trebon said.

The University receives no state funding for the summer session, Trebon added. Lowering out-of-state tuition increases demand, he said.

"Summer school is 100 percent self-supporting," Trebon said. "It's a way to pay the bills."

A larger than normal number of junior, senior and graduate students will be attending the summer session, Trebon said. With a stagnant economy, many students find it easier to take classes than find jobs, he said.

Although enrolled in classes, a majority of attending students will spend their summer off campus.

The University expects to house 250 to 300 students in the residence halls during summer session, Residence Life Associate Director Sheri Donahoe said.

Between 20 to 25 percent of summer attendees are not regular University students, Trebon said. He attributes that number to Eugene natives who attend school elsewhere but pick up a few credits while home for the summer.

The summer session offers a variety of schedules, ranging from week-end courses, two four-week sessions and an eight-week session. Slightly less than half will participate in the eight-week session, Trebon said.

Four-week sessions are also popular, he said, because they allow students to earn credit quickly, leaving time for employment.

The average undergraduate summer student will take nine credits, and the typical graduate student will bear a seven-credit workload.

Trebon said the courses offered in the summer are demand-driven, with high enrollment in language, economics, political science and education classes.

Sports brief

Two UO athletes named to All-America First Team

Two University redshirt seniors were recently rewarded for keeping "student" in "student-athlete."

On June 19, Adam Bergquist and Billy Pappas were each named to the 15-man Verizon Academic All-America First Team for their hard work and studiousness while at the University.

Exercise and movement science major Bergquist, a cross country runner, graduated with a 3.99 GPA.

Pappas, a psychology graduate, earned a 3.61 GPA while splitting time between academia and track and field.

Oregon is the only school in the Pacific-10 Conference to have a player named to the first team. The pair also brought the University more recognition, being the only school nationally to have two students honored this year as first-team recipients.

The Verizon Academic All-America Teams are selected by the 1,800-member Collegiate Sports Information Directors Association. Eligibility standards require an athlete to be a varsity starter or key reserve while keeping at least a 3.20 cumulative GPA on a 4.00 scale.
