News brief

ASUO Student Senate holds its first meeting

The ASUO Student Senate held its first summer meeting Tuesday. Newly elected ASUO Vice President Ben Buzbee presided, along with senate President Kate Kranzush and Vice President Dominique Beamonte.

The short meeting concluded routine business traditionally done at the end of a fiscal year. Senators unanimously passed several small money transfers to correct minor budget deficits. A measure was also passed providing funds for DDS to add safety components to vans.

Kranzush, who will be serving as senate president only for the summer, said the main goal is to allocate $5,000 to student groups for summer programs.

ASUO Accounting Coordinator Jennifer Creighton said the money will promote programs such as "conferences, retreats and to get ready for next year."

The meeting ended with no major changes.

Tuesday, however, Republicans caucused to re-appoint Hannon as chairman.

Republicans were successful, and on Tuesday night Derfler dismissed Republican Sens. Steve Harper, Charles Starr of Hillsboro, Ken Messerle of Coos Bay, Roger Beyer of Molalla and Democrat Margaret Carter of Portland. Derfler also added Senate Majority Leader Dave Nelson, R-Pendleton, and Sen. Minnis, R-Wood Village.

Sen. Tony Corcoran, D-Cottage Grove, was convinced Tuesday morning that the Republicans would succeed in replacing the fiscal conservatives.

"If they don't replace these guys, we're in for a rough time," he said.

Critics of the initial changes were concerned that mandatory sentencing overrides a judge's verdict.

"The code as it was first written, would have essentially said: Regardless of what the judge might think or the outstanding circumstances, there will be a minimum sentence (for the offense)," Kelly said.

City staff initially proposed changes to the ordinance to make city code match state law.

"Chris Kilcullen (a Eugene Police

Dave Nelson, who was added to the budget panel Tuesday, said he was still committed to protecting K-12 education and balancing the budget, but that the top priority was just to get a deal passed.

"We're trying to find the votes to balance this budget," he said.

The Senate budget battle started after senators defeated a House plan last week calling for a 75-cent increase in cigarette taxes, $100 million in across-the-board and selective cuts to state programs and $20 million in restored money to K-12 education.

After the House bill defeat, fiscal conservative Republicans wrote a counterproposal, essentially a repeat of May's Measure 13, that would have switched an educational endowment fund to a school rainy day fund and immediately taken $220 million from it to aid school budgets. This measure was opposed by many Democrats, including Corcoran.

"Polls show that thing is dead at $220 million," he said, adding that the measure would help schools this year but hurt financial aid prospects for college students.

Another hotly debated issue that will come up in the next proposal is the cigarette tax, which was approved by the House but failed to get the required 18-vote super majority in the Senate last week. Some senators believe that a new proposal will include a variation of the cigarette tax.

"The cigarette tax is alive, and the next proposal will have it," Corcoran said. If passed, the tax will appear on the Oregon ballot in September.

Officer) came and talked to us," Harding said. Kilcullen told students that "the mandatory minimum wasn't what (the ordinance) was about," and explained that "the city of Eugene is adopting state law into its books."

The final revisions from the June 12 decision do not go into effect until July 13, as the bill has a 30-day delay, Eugene Police Department spokeswoman Mandy Fox said.

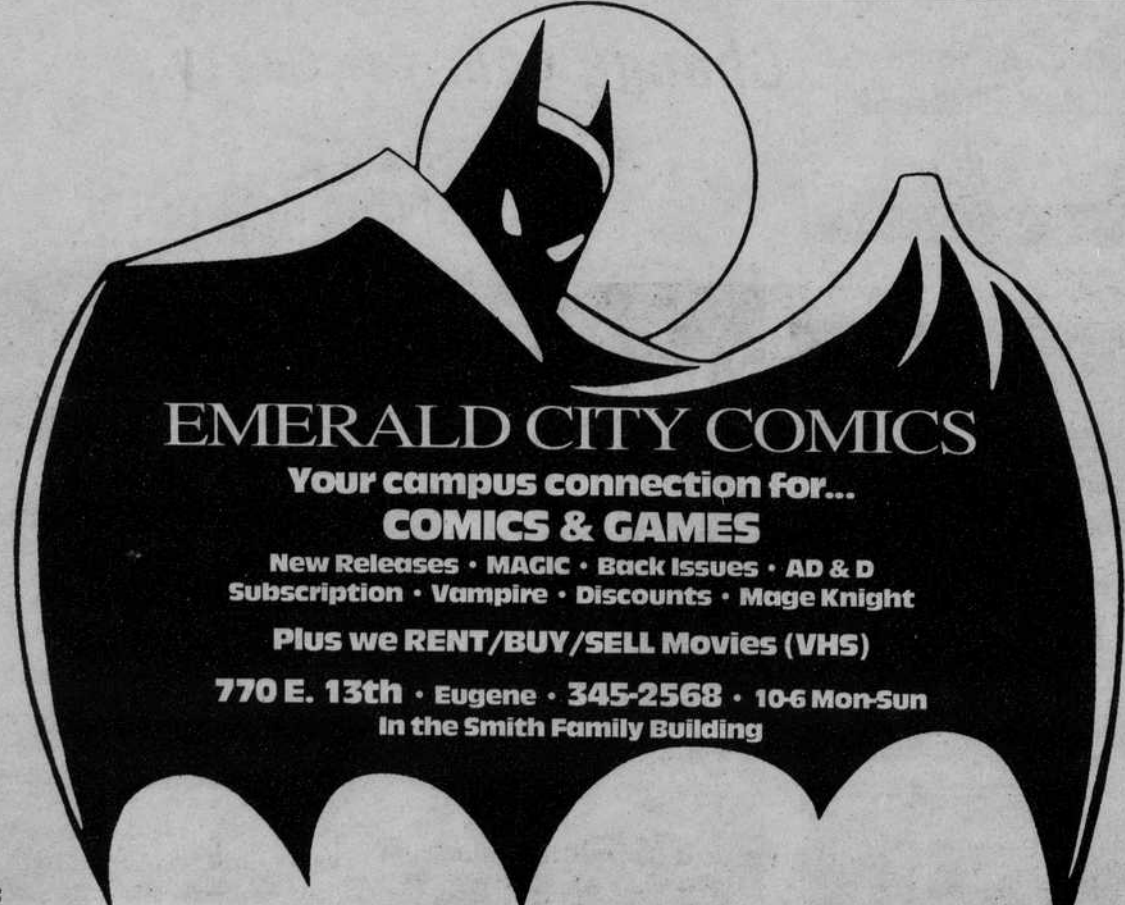

The mandatory sentencing in the initial proposal would have removed alternatives to fines, such as the University's BUSTED program. The program educates students on alcohol-related issues in place of a fine. "I know people who went to diversion programs, and this has helped them a lot," ASUO Outreach Coordinator Harding told the Emerald on May 29.

Harding, also the president of Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity, said that although students' concern over the changes has died down, there still may be future revisions at the July 1 meeting.

"It's hard to say how much students have influenced things," Harding said. "It's not over yet."
