great," Jerry's Garcia's ex-wife Carolyn Adams Garcia said. "Dead-heads have a fondness for the show."

Garcia, also known as Mountain Girl, will be introducing Dark Star Orchestra.

"(The Dead) played the longest of any American band," she said. "For a long time, they were the biggest selling show in history."

Newly-minted fans will mix with those who attended the original concert and may have even been a part of the show.

Nicki Scully is a longtime fan and ex-wife of Rock Scully—who was the road manager for the Dead the first 20 years they toured.

"In 1972, (the concert) was a fairly spontaneous benefit for Springfield Creamery," Scully said. "It was 100 degrees or higher in August, and 25,000 people showed up."

"What made 1972 really special was, it was a blend of Oregon Country Fair and the Grateful Dead," Scully said. "My greatest memory of that was at the sunset, the halo through the hair of the crowd."

The Dead repeated the event 10 years later with another Field Trip and tried unsuccessfully to meet in 1992.

Scully helped the 1982 Oregon Field Trip occur by acting as a liaison between the Fair and the Dead. She described decorating the Fair property for the Dead's concert with 20 Army surplus parachutes that she and others tie-dyed. They didn't have time to heat-seal the dye, and a rainstorm came and made all of the colors run into the dust in bright pools.

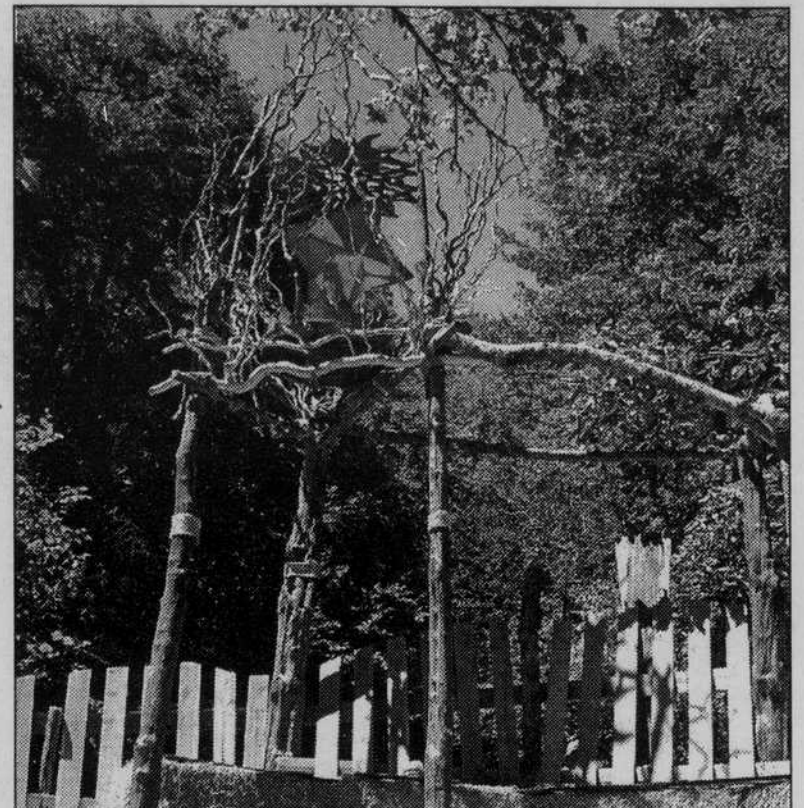

The down payment to buy the Fair property came from the revenue generated by the 1982 Field Trip.

The Springfield Creamery, run by Chuck and Sue Kesey, Ken Kesey's brother and sister-in-law, has been helping the Fair produce and promote the Dead Field Trips since the 1972 event. Money from the field trips, in turn, helped out the Creamery.

Ken Kesey himself was present at the Dead's 1982 concert, putting on his own backstage show called "The Loyal Order of the Underdogs."

Ken's son, Zane Kesey, said that he will drive a replica of the famed Further Bus to the Fair every day. Ken Kesey and his friends, the Merry Pranksters, took the original Further Bus across the country.

Zane Kesey will park the bus next to a booth designed to raise money for a statue to commemorate his father. The new bus, which Zane has had since 1990, has been on a separate tour to commemorate his father's adventures and the spirit of psychedelia.

"It stayed for a summer in the Rock 'n' Roll Hall of Fame, and we took it to the United Kingdom," Zane said. "The saltwater on the boat (that took it to the United Kingdom) didn't do it too well, so I've been dealing with scraping the barnacles off."

Zane, who is a Prankster himself, promised that he—and a group of people whom he did not name—had pranks aplenty to surprise fair-goers. The pranks will be harmless fun, he said.

The Fair's Midnight Show, in which Ken Kesey regularly performed in the past, might also get a few surprises from Zane. Zane said that his father objected to the exclusive nature of the Midnight Show.

Only those who camp overnight at the Fair or who can beat the security sweep that runs after hours, will be able to glimpse the hours-long spectacle of the Midnight Show, which regularly features surprise guests and political humor. Kesey startled fair officials by threatening to move the show to the parking lot one year, his son said.

"(My father) wanted everyone on stage," Zane said. "If I do something, it'll probably be along those lines."

Zane also planned to read from his father's children's book, "Little Tricker Squirrel Meets Big Double Bear," to honor him.

"It's a family story from (my father's) grandma that was passed down to her," Zane said.

Others also plan to honor Ken Kesey.

"There's a lot of presence around Ken," Country Fair general manager Leslie Scott said.

Ray Sewell, also known as Chez Ray, was the chef for both the Grateful Dead and for Ken Kesey's traveling band of Pranksters. Sewell is planning a presentation on the stage next to his food booth, called Ray's Gritz La Ritz. He is calling the performance "Speak Kesey."

"What we're planning to do on our stage is have the spoken word as the focus," Sewell said.

He plans to discuss not only Kesey, but the history of the Country Fair.

Sewell, also a Prankster, promised some pranks.

"There's some chatter; something will come about," Sewell said. "They can't keep colors down. They radiate."
