Bell has started a majority of matches for the Ducks this season, despite playing in the Pac-10, a conference not normally kind to freshmen.

"She was a starter since she first walked on to a volleyball court," Hartner said. "I think she could've started at 95 percent of the schools in the country."

For Bell, the starting spot has been welcome, although a bit of a surprise. Especially because the Pac-10 is a cut above the rest of the nation and is a definite adjustment from high school.

"I didn't even have the first thought in my mind that I was going to start," she said. "It's a big-time commitment here. I practiced every day in high school, but it's nothing like practicing here. At practice, you give your 110 percent every day, and if you don't, then we're not giving to our teammates what we need to be doing."

When Oregon head coach Carl Ferreira was recruiting Bell, he saw in her a set of intangibles that he knew would carry over well to the college game.

After all, when you take your team all the way to the state championship two seasons in a row, you're going to have that winning attitude.

"She has a tremendous feel for the game," Ferreira said. "She walked into the front door with that. She has a great feel of how to make her hitters better."

Actually, Folen believes that Bell could be the cornerstone of a group of Oregon freshmen — which includes Kelly Russell, Dariam Acevedo and Jaclyn Jones — that could take the Ducks to the next level.

Ferreira "needs to get more of those kinds of players," Folen said. "She can definitely be someone who can assist in turning the program around."

For Bell, that couldn't come soon enough. After enjoying a winning program at Sam Barlow, she has been thrust into a program that has not had a winning season since 1990.

"I think it's tough on everyone," Bell said. "It's frustrating to be working every day so hard having just the strain on your body, both mentally and physically, and then just not having the outcome you want."

Hartner has called her a "gamer," Ferreira believes she is "legit" and has the "intangibles" to succeed, while Folen said "she is definitely a spark for the team."

No matter how you put it, Bell is a major Pac-10 talent. And there's no better place for her to strut her stuff than at Oregon.

"We are so young right now, and it's just reassuring to know how good we're going to be," Bell said.

saves, behind Fletcher.

Five Ducks will step on the field wearing an Oregon jersey for the last time. Seniors Sarah Denner, Amanda Orand, Peterson, Thayer and Peters will conclude their Oregon careers tonight.

"It allows us a proper way to send them off," Steffen said. "This is a chance for them to bring the season to a good wrap-up at home in front of their friends, family and their teammates."

The Ducks and Beavers face off at Papé Field at 7 p.m.

Canada — should get a serious look against Horsholm, while junior college transfer Kayla Steen also gets her first playing time in an Oregon uniform.

"I'm starting to get a feel for the pace more, and I just kind of feel more comfortable in my surroundings," Ganes said when asked about her transition to the college game so far.

Oregon has shown its intensity leading up to the exhibition, with practices and scrimmages hard-fought and competitive. Still, getting up for an exhibition game is not always the easiest thing to do, especially when it won't count in the standings.

But Smith believes the Ducks will be up to the task.

"I think we are more than ready to play against a team with another colored jersey," she said. "Some players have been guarding the same person for almost three weeks. Particularly with our post players, it can get feisty down there. I think we're ready to play another team."
