few committed people.

Hicks said he thinks people are not volunteering because they generally don't want to work on weekends, when DPS needs them most.

Madden said she participated in the program last spring and thinks it's vital to campus safety.

"It is not the most glamorous job, walking around in the dark and in the cold," she said. "But it's worth it so that others can have the mentality that campus is safe."

Madden said Mortar Board and members of the greek system have shown interest in participating.

James George, of the Interfraternity Council, said his fraternity, Delta Sigma Phi, participates in the program because it is important for people to feel safe on campus at night.

"If people feel uncomfortable walking around campus at night, the program can ease that apprehension," he said. "It's sort of that 'take back the night' attitude."

And Madden said once the program gets going again, pairs of volunteers will be expected to work the same shift every week for two-hour time blocks. Shifts will be Sunday through Thursday from 8 p.m. to midnight and on Friday and Saturday from 8 p.m. to 2 a.m.

"We just really hope to get the program up and running again," Hicks said.

The Yellow Jackets will have a training session Sunday from 2 p.m. to 6 p.m. in 146 Straub, and Madden said interested parties are welcome.

Madden said if people can't make it to training, they can still participate in the program by contacting the Yellow Jackets or filling out an interest form on the DPS Web site.
