Senate brief

ASUO Senate passes ISA special requests

The ASUO Student Senate approved two special requests, dealt with housekeeping duties and tabled a grievance at their weekly meeting Tuesday.

The senate approved two requests by the International Student Association.

The first request was to transfer $15 from a surplus account to an office supplies account. The motion passed 12 to 1. The second request was to transfer $2,200 from a surplus account to the International Night account for production and publicity of the event. The motion passed 12 to 1.

The senate rejected a motion to have its meeting room changed from the EMU Boardroom to the Metolius Room, also in the EMU. The vote was 11 to 2 against the move.

The reasons for the Senate's decision included the size of the Metolius Room, which would make it more difficult for community members to attend the meeting, and the comfort of the current location.

"I really love these (comfortable) chairs," said senator Eric Bailey.

In other business, the senate tabled a grievance until a later meeting. The issue was deliberated in "executive session," which means that portion of the meeting was closed to the public.

Senator Andy Elliot did not comment on what was discussed, but he they did not deal with the issue.

"There was no action taken," Elliot said.

a student group," said Emily Howard, a regional organizer for the United Students Against Sweatshops. "We feel more free to express what we need to do." ASUO Women's Center spokeswoman Jenna Cunningham said she thought the old policy was a "major issue of free speech" and was happy to see the administration's willingness to negotiate.

"I'm very happy to hear that the administration is actually listening to student concerns," she said. And "I'd like to think our voices made some sort of difference."

Kristina Armenakis, co-director for the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, Queer Alliance, said the main victory for her group is the freedom from financial liability.

"As far as administration procedures go, it's going to be a lot easier for us, in terms of printing out things, not to put an 'O' on our publications," she said. "Financially, it's a lot easier."

The ASUO Student Senate withdrew from the debate after the policy change, dropping a proposed resolution that would have denounced the mandatory-logo policy.

Student Senator Joe Streckert, who introduced the resolution, said the administration's decision will give groups a greater sense of identity.

"Student groups who do want to put that logo on their publications — by all means they should be able to do so," he said.

Streckert added that student groups should take the credit for the policy reversal.

"They shouted loud enough that something was done."

in obtaining donations should arrive early because they disappear quickly.

It is not too late to volunteer. Farfan said the dinner usually has about 500 volunteers, and students interested in donating their time can sign up for any time during the dinner.

Farfan said the celebration will also offer music, kids' games and massages. She said all students are welcome to attend.

"The theme is neighbors helping neighbors," she said. "And we all ways think of the students as part of our neighbors."

Several other local charities and schools will also host dinners, including The Salvation Army and the Eugene Mission.

Instead of dining out, some students have the option of bringing the dinner to them. Carey Bonn, a senior environmental studies and sociology major, is looking forward to staying in Eugene over the weekend instead of making the trek back to Bend, his hometown.

"I got my mom to come to me this year," Bonn said. "She's bringing me food."

However, Bonn's mom won't be bringing him any turkey this year. He recently became a vegetarian as part of his sociology class, which requires each student to make a lifestyle change that will benefit the environment.

"It's going to be a weird Thanksgiving," Bonn said.

For those who are looking to do more than just chow down, Thanksgiving activities don't have to revolve around food. The Mt. Pisgah Arboretum will hold a Thanksgiving nature reading from 10 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. Participants should bring their favorite nature writing to the arboretum's visitor center at 34901 Frank Parish Road. There is a suggested donation of $2, and hot apple cider will be served.

Whether it's turkey with a friend or cider with a stranger this Thanksgiving, students have plenty of options that don't involve a TV dinner.
