Share A Miracle Become An Egg Donor

The Fertility Center of Oregon has helped many couples achieve pregnancy since 1978. We are in need of Egg Donors to help infertile women.

Procedures are done in a pleasant local environment over a period of only six weeks, and donors are compensated $2500 for their time. If you are a healthy woman age 21-31 and are interested, call 683-1559 or visit our website at www.WomensCare.com.

Testing

$12 for results in two weeks, or $25 for results in two days. Students who meet specific criteria may also be eligible for FPEP, a federal program that provides contraception and free screening for sexually transmitted infections.

The HIV antibody test at the health center is confidential but not anonymous. Positive results are reported to the Oregon Health Department but are not otherwise released without the patient's permission. The health center stopped offering anonymous testing in October 2001, when the Names Reporting Law went into effect.

The law requires health clinics that identify their patients to report the names of those who test positive. Clinics that do not require patient identification may offer anonymous testing.

University graduate student Justin Grishkin said some people might not feel comfortable taking a confidential test and would prefer anonymity. However, he said confidential testing wouldn't deter him from getting a test.

"Honestly, if I tested positive for HIV, I wouldn't be like, 'Oh my God, the state knows I'm positive for HIV,'" he said. "I would be like, 'Oh my God, I'm positive for HIV.'"

HIV Alliance Counseling and Testing Director Kelly Moore said anonymous testing is important for people worried about privacy.

"Concerns about confidentiality is a barrier for some people to get tested," she said.

HIV Alliance, a nonprofit organization with outreach programs and services for people with HIV and AIDS, offers free anonymous testing with the Lane County Public Health Department. Students also can get both anonymous and confidential testing at Planned Parenthood for $30.

Although the health center provides pamphlets about HIV testing, it does not offer specific outreach programs that target the campus community.

"Students can come talk to us about (HIV)," student peer health educator Kim Ito said. "As for programs, I don't think we have any."

Outreach may convince students about the significance of getting tested, Grishkin said.

"People don't feel the saliency of the issue, and they don't recognize the range of alternatives or possibilities," he said.

Graduate student Girin Guha said students may not want to get tested, even if they know they have engaged in behavior that might put them at risk for infection.

"Some days you don't want to look at yourself in the mirror; you know what you look like," said Guha. "That's somewhat like HIV. It's like checking your grade when you know it's bad."

Recruit

For the past two years, the University's Ambassador Program has hired students to work as multicultural recruiters who make phone calls to admitted and prospective students of color, and also coordinate recruitment events.

"I think it is good to have a focus on students of color, and it's an improvement from the past," Ambassador Program Multicultural Recruiter Gabriela Serrano said.

Former graduate teaching fellow Multicultural Recruiter Khaleelah Rahsaan said the University should implement retention programs along with its recruitment efforts.

She said the Office of Multicultural Affairs is a great support system because it offers academic and emotional guidance, but more resources should be made available to students.

"I know several students have wanted a retention program on campus," she said. "I think the University should take the time and energy to develop a retention program because it doesn't really exist."

Hulick Baiza said the Office of Admissions plans to continue hosting Connections, recruiting at high schools and expanding knowledge in the community about resources available at the University for students of color.

"In the long run, I hope to put myself out of business," he said. "It would be great not to have to worry that every group doesn't have a chance to pursue higher education. In the meantime, people like me are resources."
