Leading history
Black History Month person of the day

Mary Elizabeth Bowser, whose dates of birth and death are unknown, was born into slavery in the late 1830s on a plantation in Richmond, Va. After her master, John Van Lew, died in the late 1840s, his wife and children freed their slaves.

An outspoken abolitionist, Van Lew's wife Elizabeth sent Bowser to Philadelphia to get an education. As tensions increased between the North and South, Bowser returned to Virginia to work as a household servant for the Van Lew family.

As Elizabeth Van Lew saw that war was impending, she recommended Bowser for a household job in the Confederate White House in Virginia. Bowser, who had already been sending reports to Union leaders about unrest in the South, used her position as maid servant under Confederacy President Jefferson Davis and other Southern military leaders to gain access to war dispatches and discussions of troop strategy and movement.

Bowser memorized details of the conversations and dispatches and sent it along to Union spies, who coded the information before delivering it to military leaders in the North. She proved to be one of the most effective spies for the North. Davis never found out about the leak in his house, although he did know Union leaders kept discovering his plans.

members of the group are eligible to vote during meetings. However, if the assembly wishes to bring the Iraq resolution to a formal vote on Feb. 28, more than half of the body must attend the meeting.

Professor Emeritus Frank Stahl, who has been a dominant voice behind the assembly's petition, spoke for the resolution at the December meeting of the senate and at the Jan. 31 non-binding discussion of the committee. He said the completion of the petition shows the University supports the resolution even if the administration does not.

"I think it's wonderful that the president has called a timely meeting of the assembly," Stahl said.

Frohnmayr has opposed all University efforts to pass a resolution concerning Iraq, and the recent success of petitioners has not changed his stance on the issue, University spokeswoman Pauline Austin said.

"The administration is not the voice of the University," Students for Peace member Philippa Anderson said. "The fact that the faculty is comfortable enough in their decision to have a voice separate from the administration is a big deal and says a lot about the University and the professors and faculty that work here."

College Republican Chairman Jarrett White said it is important that people opposed to the resolution also attend the meeting.

"Why should those of us who are for this war support a faculty resolution that does not represent us?" White asked. "It is hard enough to stand up as a conservative on this campus without having to stand up against the official voice of the University."

If students do not get federal aid because of the drug provision, they may be eligible for other loans and grants through the state government, private banks and even the University, Student Loan Representative Heather Gregory added.

FAFSA forms can be filled out online at www.fafsa.ed.gov, and students with questions about their eligibility should contact the University's financial aid office.

interpretation that Kleckner was incorrect in his claim that PFC had no rules governing the use of the recall procedure. Harris said PFC stated in its by-laws that it would follow "Robert's Rules of Order" for procedures not explicitly outlined by the committee, and that the parliamentary manual contains rules on making motions to reconsider.

Kleckner filed another grievance Wednesday morning with ASUO Programs Administrator Vanessa Harris asking that PFC's motion to reconsider the Emerald's budget be declared null and void because he believed PFC had not followed "Robert's Rules of Order." In his grievance, Kleckner said PFC had missed its opportunity to recall the Emerald's budget under these rules because a motion to reconsider can only be made on the day the vote was originally made or the next day. PFC approved the Emerald's incidental fee allocation at $123,370, a 2.81 percent increase, on Feb. 6 and voted to reconsider the motion on Feb. 13, Kleckner stated. He added that although "Robert's Rules of Order" provides some exceptions to the rule, PFC did not qualify for these exceptions based on how the committee is defined in the ASUO Constitution.

Kleckner said he decided to file another grievance because he felt it was critical that administrative bodies, such as PFC, have a process for operating and make sure they follow it.

"I think (filing a grievance) is a worthy exercise to make sure we keep the incidental fee safe," Kleckner said.

Career Center Director Larry Smith said he was not upset about having a budget recall. Smith added that he believed PFC was recalling the Career Center's budget to reopen discussion about a GTF position that was not funded at the group's original hearing.

"I am looking forward to being able to talk with PFC in order to see what they have in mind," Smith said.
