Music

pieces composed for the Waging Peace Through Singing project two years ago. The festival will also showcase a tribute to Lou Harrison, the famed composer who appeared as a composer-in-residence at the 2000 "Festival of the Millennium." Harrison died last winter.

Whether music is a life's passion, a tool for unity or an evening escape, Parkhurst said he invites students to attend what promises to be "a very listener-friendly festival with lots of beautiful music."

He added that timing is important. "Now more than ever, during this difficult period of war, it is important for artists to create and reach out to the public through music-making," Kyr added. "Especially in the most challenging times, music, and particularly new music, inspires us to celebrate the forces of hope and creativity."

Tickets will be available at the door, and prices vary for each performance. For a full schedule of events, visit <http://music.uoregon.edu>.
