Wine and dine at market

Review by Jeremy Williams

If you have never been to or heard of the Jiffy Market, my recommendation to dine there might prompt a look of confusion on your face. The name of the business gives the impression of your local corner grocery store, which is what it started as in 1962. Now owners Tom and Joe Robertson have transformed their parents' little corner store into a fantastic wine and deli.

Located at 3445 Hilyard St., Jiffy Market has all the little necessities of your local corner store but also has a deli inside which serves breakfast, lunch and dinner and is home to a very extensive wine and beer collection. Walking into the market, I was greeted by two smiling faces behind the deli counter. Since it was lunch time, I opted for a classic-style Reuben sandwich accompanied by a cup of tomato bisque soup. The Reuben was stacked generously with pastrami and had just the right amount of other ingredients that characterize a Reuben. I am a big tomato soup person and I have to say this tomato bisque soup was fantastic, thick and rich with flavor (unlike the Campbell's some delis try to pass off as their soup of the day).

Fellow college students pay attention here: from 5-9pm, Monday through Friday, a burger and a pint of domestic beer is only $5.00, a single pint of domestic will run you only $1.25, and micros are only $2.25. If you are a wine drinker, you can pick from one of thousands of bottles the Jiffy Market has to offer at cost and pay only a $2.00 corking fee (this, by the way, is an amazing deal). The deli offers soups, salads, burgers, burritos, fish and chips, and an array of sandwiches, all of which can be eaten inside the deli or outside on the newly-finished patio. My recommendation: head out to Jiffy Market on a nice Sunday afternoon, take a seat on the patio, order some lunch or dinner, try a couple bottles of wine, and take in the day.
