Eastern ancestry and current events such as the war in Iraq.

Besides submitting an application, cover letter and résumé, students interested in working on next year's ASUO staff must also face the Executive's hand-picked interview board. Melton said some of the characteristics a successful applicant should show are a knowledge of grassroots organizing or a passion to learn it, as well as a commitment to bettering the student body.

"To an extent, within any interview process, it's hard to determine if someone really wants to be doing that job or is just looking for a stepping stone," Melton said, but she added she has an eye for passionate people and thinks the interview board will be able to pick the right people for the right jobs.

Future employers look kindly on résumés decorated with student government positions, according to Career Center Director Larry Smith.

"Students serving in ASUO positions have a significant opportunity to be involved and make a difference by participating in the governance process," Smith said. "If they tell employers what they have done and the magnitude of their responsibilities, employers will listen."

There are 17 open staff positions for the 2003-04 school year, and they run the gamut of student leadership positions from greek community liaison to finance coordinator. Besides these two positions, the Executive is looking to hire a shared governance/University affairs director, health and women's advocate, campus outreach director, public relations coordinator, programs administrator, international student advocate, legislative associate, elections coordinator, marketing director, nontraditional student advocate, childcare subsidy advocate, controller-at-large, controller and two co-multicultural advocate positions.
