worries about keeping her indoors.

"If I had to give her away, I'd give her to a house," Jamie said. "She's missing out on a lot ... cats need to be outside."

While pet-friendly apartments may be few and far between in Eugene, students can get advice at www.rentwithpets.org, a Web site sponsored by the Humane Society of the United States. According to the Web site, "moving" and "landlord won't allow" are among the top reasons people give up their pets. The Web site offers tips for finding pet-friendly housing and ideas for making pets appear more apartment-friendly to potential landlords, such as reference letters and résumés for their furry companions.

Morris said she has her own advice for students keeping pets in their apartments.

"Keep them out of the windows," Morris said.
