It was junior Mike Sica who provided a glimpse into Oregon's future, as he shot well enough to get invited back individually in the tourney's fourth round.

Asked if he felt he was emerging as a leader, Sica discussed next year's team.

"Next year we are young," Sica said. "I'll try to help out the younger guys, so they aren't afraid. If a few guys step up, we will be good."

Nosler also added that he hasn't decided who will fill the leadership role now that seniors Chris Carnahan and John Ellis have concluded their collegiate careers.

"The cream will rise to the top,"

Nosler said. "It depends on who has the work ethic. It will be interesting to see who wants it bad enough and is ready to play."

Young women's squad ends season disappointed

Despite not making the NCAA Regionals or the NCAA Championships, head coach Shannon Rouillard is optimistic about how things are yet to play out for the women's team.

"When you have a young team, there are going to be some ups and downs," Rouillard said. "We are in the process of rebuilding the program."

It was senior Annie Davis, junior Lacy Erickson, sophomores Jess Carlyon and Johnna Nealy and freshmen

Therese Wenslow, Erin Andrews and Michelle Timpani that traveled to most of the season's tournaments. The team was one of the youngest in the Pacific-10 Conference.

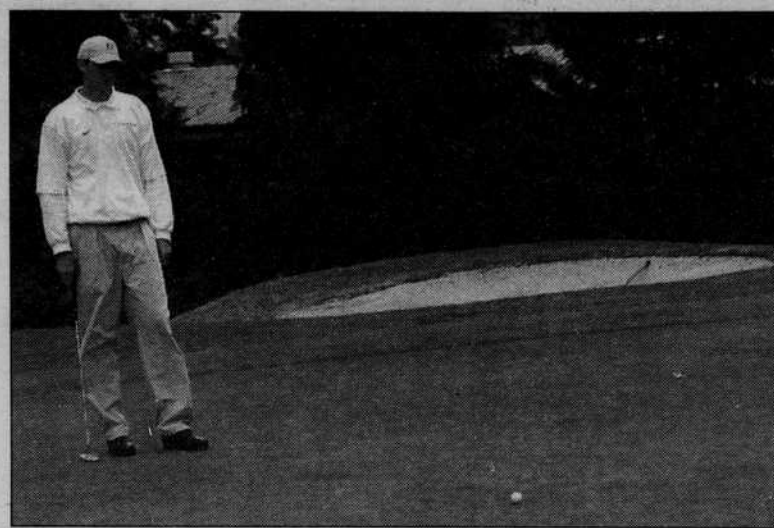

Nealy and Wenslow constantly battled for the No. 1 spot, proving just how young the team was.

"Therese and Johnna proved day in and day out they were the top two in the program," Rouillard said.

If one thing is evident from the season, it's that this team will have a vested interest in offseason workouts.

"All of us are disappointed in our play," said Nealy. "If we put in the time, we have a good chance (of qualifying for regionals)."
