NEWS BRIEF

University extends deadline for privacy code input

The University General Council's office has extended the submission date of its updated student privacy code to Sept. 2 to garner more public comment on the issue, said Randy Geller, director of policy and legal affairs.

The extension of the original Aug. 11 deadline was granted after several individuals requested more time for students to comment before the final draft is sent to Secretary of State Bill Bradbury for verification.

Geller said there are no public hearings scheduled before the deadline, but they would continue to receive and consider written public comment on the issue.

"We'll review all of the comments that have been received and determine what updates to make," he said. "It'll start to happen soon because we're not that far away from Sept. 2."

The new code will bring the University in line with federal laws that allow law enforcement authorities to request personal student information without notifying the student. The laws have existed since 1994, but there have not been any such requests made to the University in the past.

Those interested in commenting on the updates to the code can submit written testimony to the attention of the rules coordinator at the General Council's office, 221 Johnson Hall.

Grads

their names printed in the program as graduates.

Unlike the grand spring commencement that draws thousands of students, along with their families and friends, Johnson said the summer ceremony is scaled down and more intimate.

"They do read everybody's name," Hammock said, adding that the name reading is an honor spring graduates do not get in the main ceremony due to the sheer number of graduates. However, summer graduates do miss out on the separate department graduations.

In case of rain, the ceremony will be at McArthur Court. There will also be an informal reception for graduates and their families after commencement.
