Oregon quarterback Kellen Clemens has directed the Ducks' offense without missing a step in his four starts this season. The sophomore from Burns has passed for 729 yards, while completing 50 of his 85 passes. He has also run for 32 yards in Oregon's four wins, and accounts for 190.2 yards per game of Oregon offense. He has demonstrated a renewed sense of confidence after struggling last season, and has shown the ability to scramble out of the pocket only when needed. Against the Cougars, Clemens needs to get off to a fast start. Washington State has been susceptible to the big play, but has been able to maintain a 3-1 record with key defensive stops. He will again split time with senior Jason Fife, but that hasn't hampered him yet. And here's no reason to believe that will happen now.

Yes, a kicker will be key for Washington State at Autzen Stadium on Saturday. Drew Dunning has connected on 13 field goals this season in just 14 attempts; his only miss coming in the Cougars' 29-26 overtime loss to Notre Dame. Dunning leads the nation with 3.25 field goals per game on average and sits 10th in the nation in points per game at 11.75. Against the Ducks, the senior will become a key player as special teams have been an increasingly important focus. After Oregon blocked a punt and an extra point against Michigan, a field goal miss could haunt Washington State. If the Cougars can keep the game close, it could come down to a battle between Dunning and Oregon's Jared Siegel. What a battle that would be.
