the Cardinal's inexperience and youth could be taking affect. Of the 94 players on the Stanford roster, 47 are either true freshman or redshirt freshman.

With the exception of senior left tackle Kirk Chambers, the Stanford offensive line has either true freshman or players who have limited experience in the other four positions.

Despite a winless conference record and inexperienced squad, what is it going to take for the Cardinal offense to succeed against the Ducks?

"We need to run the football," Teevens said. "Kenny Tolon, J.R. Lemon and David Marrero have had opportunities, and we'll continue to give them the football. We need to demonstrate balance."

Tolon, Lemon and Marrero have accounted for all of the Cardinal's rushing yardage with a combined average of 113.5 yards per game. Stanford's team average in rushing of 113 yards per game has outlasted its opponents who average just 91.8 yards per game.

"We need to run the football. Kenny Tolon, J.R. Lemon and David Marrero have had opportunities, and we'll continue to give them the football. We need to demonstrate balance."

Buddy Teevens
Stanford head coach

Stanford's rush defense currently ranks 17th in the nation as the Cardinal has managed to hold three of its five opponents to less than 100 yards on the ground. Oregon's rush defense is 11th in the nation.

Wide receiver Luke Powell will be key to Stanford's success. In his first game of the season, Powell caught 12 passes for 172 yards and two touchdowns. His performance ranked him ninth all-time in school history in catches and 15th in receiving yards.

The senior leads the team with 26 receptions for 289 yards in the first five games.

Stanford leads the overall series with Oregon, 43-22-1. The teams first met in 1919.

This will be the fourth-straight game in the series played at Autzen Stadium. Prior to 2001, the Cardinal had won three times straight from 1995-97.

The Ducks are "a very solid football team," Teevens said. "They have the ability to have great success any time they go out there. They are explosive offensively."
