Oregon free safety Keith Lewis has always been a key for the Duck defense. Earlier this season, when the Ducks were on their way to a 4-0 start, Lewis was central to the team's success. He talked, but his words rang true on Saturdays. When Oregon went 1-4 over its next five games, it seemed that Lewis disappeared into the cold Oregon night. Last week against California, the Oregon secondary stepped up to the challenge against the Golden Bears and quarterback Aaron Rodgers. The group held Cal to 188 passing yards and showed that it does have some fight left in it. Lewis said he didn't go the NFL after last season because he wanted to leave the Oregon program as a winner. With two games left in the Ducks' season, the opportunity to take advantage of that statement is getting shorter by the day. Oregon could finish the regular season at 8-4, 7-5 or 6-6, depending on what happens in the last two games.

Lewis will be key to that finish, but you don't want to ask him how he's going to do that. For the second straight season, Oregon head coach Mike Bellotti banned him from talking to the media before the Ducks' game against Washington.
