Rains cause law school to flood

Heavy rains caused considerable damage to the Knight Law Center's main floor Saturday.

According to an e-mail from the law school's Assistant Dean for Finance & Operations Jamie Moffitt, the "intense rain combined with some clogged drains in the east parking lots, funneled a tremendous amount of water down the grassy hill, through our courtyard, and into the law building." The flood primarily affected the Wayne Morse Commons area and some hallways.

Moffitt said classrooms were not significantly affected, and the exam schedule for next week will remain the same. The Wayne Morse Commons area was roped off, and facilities' staff and DPS began cleaning up the area.

'Enjoying the Ride' to be screened Friday

Influential University art Professor David Foster will be remembered Friday evening with the screening of a 30-minute documentary film about his life, entitled "Enjoying the Ride: The Life of David Foster."

Foster, who died last year, was a 30-year University professor who founded the visual design program, which later evolved into the current multimedia program. He was also first to offer classes in photography, film and computer animation. Many of his students have gone on to work on films, such as "Star Wars: Episode I — The Phantom Menace," "Unbreakable," "Armageddon" and the Academy Award-winning animation film "Mona Lisa Descending a Staircase."

Students in journalism Professor Dan Miller's documentary workshop class created the film on Foster's life in collaboration with the art department. Former students Cree Riggs and Kristi Wenzel, along with Miller and art professor emeritus Ken O'Connell, directed the film.

The film will be screened at 8 p.m. in 100 Willamette and is free to the public. A nine-minute documentary called "Animania," which is about the art department's animation program, will precede the documentary.
