

Person on the street: What is your favorite vice?

"Watching trashy television. I love to watch the reality TV shows. Fox always gets me."

from his experience in the Army. He said he thought it was "dang good."

Although no one specifically taught him how to smoke, Lau said he mostly learned from movies like Scarface.

If someone is considering picking up cigar smoking, Colbert said they would be glad to give anyone a lesson in cigars at his shop.

"One of the things people like about our shop is that we will bring you in here and talk to you," he said.

Lau, like Colbert, said he enjoys the flavor of cigars.

"There's something about it," Lau said.

He said he enjoys the aroma and texture of most cigars, and his favorites are the big cigars because they have a fuller flavor.

"It is definitely an acquired taste, and some people think it smells like bunghole," he said. He agreed that the after-smell isn't very appealing.

He added that there is a sort of stigma or stereotype associated with smoking cigars.

"It makes me feel like I should be playing Texas Hold'em poker or pool with the guys," he said.

Colbert said that someone would be "surprised at who smokes cigars." "Everybody has a vice," he said.
