are the insurance and the experience.

"If something is damaged, we fix it," Bekins Northwest Moving & Storage employee Jim Oakes said.

Oakes said his employees have a minimum of three years of experience.

The cost of a full-service move depends on how much furniture and possessions need to be transported. Most moving companies recommend getting a moving consultation, which they generally offer for free. The consultation involves taking an inventory and fixing a price for the labor.

"The cost of transportation is regulated in Oregon," Hixson said.

Because of this regulation, which means most moving companies have similar rates for ground transportation, a little research can determine whose prices are better.

Hixson calculated a hypothetical move from Eugene to Portland. Moving 1,200 pounds with some preliminary packing and transportation would cost about $500.

Oakes calculated a similar move with just loading and delivery at about $371.

"For full service with some packing, you might add $100 to $300 for labor," Oakes said.

For many people, including students such as Tighe and Knappenberger, a full service move is not the best choice.

"I like to do my own packing — I use a ton of paper, and my stuff is usually pretty safe," Knappenberger said. "I've used a few Daily Emeralds in my time."

For Renfro, moving wouldn't be the same without a few mishaps.

"We thought it would be fun to ride in the back of a U-Haul truck, but when the driver hit the gas at a stoplight, I went flying and landed on a box of china, or something breakable," he said.

Renfro recommended renting a truck and moving with friends — or getting creative in unusual circumstances.

"The last time I moved somewhere was in 1996, during the big flood. We loaded up our boxes in a canoe and floated them to our truck," Renfro said. "You know who your friends are by who helps you move."

Finding cheap ways to decorate can improve the look of a temporary home

By Breanna Scott • Freelance Reporter

After finding a place, signing the papers and are getting ready to move in, it seems like most of the hard work is done — until taking a closer look at the living arrangements and realizing the work has just begun.

The walls are bare, and the furniture is mismatched. It could be time to add some color to the room with a little cheap redecorating.

Many people run into the situation of needing or wanting to redecorate but don't have much money to accomplish their goal. Alisa Caesar, an interior decorator at Dragonfly Interior Designs, provided several suggestions on how to improve a space.

"The easiest way to make a place brighter is to paint, which adds color and freshens up the space," Caesar said. "However, sometimes painting isn't always an option to those who rent."

For those who don't have the option of painting, Caesar suggests the next level of improving the look of the furniture.

"A slipcover on a couch or chair will drastically change the look of a room," Caesar said. "Even a blanket or sheet can be used as a slipcover to change the look of the furniture."

Caesar said it is possible to add color in a variety of ways and at almost any price.

"For example, an area rug can drastically change the appearance of a room," she said.

"If the carpet is stained or ugly an area rug will cover that up, and they can be purchased at a variety of prices. A cheaper one can still look nice and can still accomplish the same look as a more expensive one."

Once a color scheme is picked, Caesar recommended adding patterns to give a space more variety.

"You can add patterned pillows or curtains to a room that pick up the other colors in the room," Caesar said. "Discount stores are good places to look for patterned things to add, although it might take longer to find something you really like."

She also said window treatments are becoming more do-it-yourself.

"All the supplies are available at various stores," she said. "You can choose the color, the fabric, the style of treatments and buy a curtain rod to hang them from. Even sheets can be used as a curtain in a pinch."

Sophomore Michelle Rose offered some suggestions about decorating on a budget.

"If you can identify your decorating inspiration, then you can find low-budget items that replicate the features that you admire," Rose said.

Sophomore Patty Miller said Ikea — the closest store is located just south of Seattle — is a good place to find items for decorating an apartment.

"It's trendy style, but cheap prices," Miller said.

Miller added that putting up posters is a cheap and easy way to cover bare walls.

"It's cool when people do things like hang their own artwork and add color and personality that way," she said. "My aunt, for example, makes artwork out of household objects and hangs it on the walls. It ends up looking pretty cool."

"Do things like decorate new lampshades for old lamps you find at thrift stores," Miller said. "This will make them look newer and trendier."

Miller said throw pillows can add a lot of color to a room and are easy to incorporate.

"You can even take an old pillow and cover it with fabric," she said. "They fill up space and accent the rest of the colors in the room easily."

Home decorating is becoming easier and more accessible as stores focus on do-it-yourself projects. While you may not be able to change everything in a new place on a small budget, you can make drastic improvements. Simply adding color to the walls, throwing down an area rug and putting new covers on couches and chairs can make a drab place look new.

"The range of things that people can do varies whether they rent or own and what the available budget is," Caesar said. "But home decorating has become so much more accessible to the average person and they are able to do a lot themselves."

Local stores provide easy, inexpensive options for decorating

There are many places to buy affordable furnishings to make a dwelling cute, comfortable and impressive. The key is shopping around.

Although most students can't spend top dollar commissioning artist Vigil Ortiz to design a bedspread or have famous designers plaster the wall to accent a Picasso painting, domestic necessities can be affordable.

Graduate student Kristin Hoobler said she has bought items on discount at yard sales including an antique coffee table for $10 and a kitchen table and a night stand for $2. She said she loves Ross Dress for Less, located in the Gateway Mall in Springfield, and T.J. Maxx, located in the Oakway Center off Coburg Road, where she has found stylish dishes and sheets. Hoobler said she has an artistic eye and enjoys making things work together.

"I get to be creative, and I save a bunch of money," she said.

Many people have found fantastic savings at thrift stores like Goodwill, with five area locations; The Salvation Army at 2065 W. Seventh Ave. in Eugene and 346 Main St. in Springfield; Value Village Thrift Store located at 555 W. Centennial Blvd. in Springfield; and St. Vincent de Paul's six local locations. However, some of the merchandise at second-hand stores is more expensive than at discount stores. For example, a used couch was selling at Value Village for $119.99, and stained lampshades were going for $4.99 at Goodwill. At Ross, furniture pieces range from $12.99 to $149.99, and lampshades are priced at $4.99 and up.

TLC's "Trading Spaces"

designer Vern Yip said in an online posting that he likes to shop at Target for lamps and glass accessories and at Banana Republic for sale bedding and towels. Area resident Lindsey Lusk said she gets good deals at Discount Depot, located at 3061 W. 11th Ave. She said the last bargain she got there was two Ralph Lauren pillows for $10.

Small touches can also make a big impact. Bright candles, vases and fake roses add color to rooms. Throws cover worn desks and tables, and small pillows accent other decorations.

To inexpensively add spark to a room, find a few decorative pieces to visually excite and cover flaws with table cloths, throws or paint. Other local stores that sell accessories are Pier 1 Imports and Bed Bath & Beyond, both located at Oakway Center off Coburg Road.
