Russell said it is disappointing for his top player not to be able to move on, especially because of the All-American year he has had and the consistency he has employed.

In Oregon's other singles match, Kost fell to No. 9 Doug Stewart of Virginia in straight sets, 6-2, 6-3.

"Manuel was matched up against a very tough player in Stewart," Russell said.

A lack of aggressiveness, Russell said, may have done in Kost.

"Manu has to realize that if you don't try to take it away from the guy then they are going to take it from you, especially at this level," Russell said.

Kost had opportunities in the match to get back into it, but couldn't convert, Russell said.

"He's got to be able to take charge out there and that takes a lot of concentration and focus," Russell said. "He did it at times today, but he just didn't do it enough."

Russell believes the experience these two players bring back with them will be very valuable not just to them, but for the whole team.

"This now leaves us a bench mark to attain from now on," Russell said. "It will help us for the future that both of these guys had successful years and took part in such a high level of tennis."

The two losses Wednesday finish off a disappointing individual postseason for both Duck tennis programs. The men and the women combined for a 0-4 record at the NCAA singles tournaments.

In other action at the men's tournament, top-seed Brian Wilson of Illinois was shocked by Rice's Robert Seale, 6-4, 6-7, 6-3.

Second-seed Benedikt Dorsch of Baylor was also upset, falling to Franticek Babej of South Alabama, 4-6, 6-4, 6-1.

Two other top eight seeds — No. 4 Catalin Gard (Mississippi) and No. 6 Jesse Witten (Kentucky) were upset and seventh-seeded Tobias Clemens of UCLA had to drop out due to injury. That leaves only three of the top eight seeds left in the tournament.
