Swinnen has record-breaking season

As the season went along, it became evident where Oregon's strength was: at the top of the lineup with Sven Swinnen.

The junior from Switzerland recorded a 21-8 record this season, moving him up to third all-time at Oregon in career singles victories with 60.

Swinnen's rise to a first-team All-Pac-10 player is even more amazing considering he started the season unranked. His first big victory of the season came over No. 25 Alex Slovic of Washington in late February.

That victory was the beginning of a six-week period in which he lost only one of his next eleven matches.

During that span Swinnen defeated No. 7 Tobias Clemens of UCLA and No. 19 Adriano Biasella of USC in consecutive matches. The victories vaulted Swinnen's ranking up to 16th in the nation, the highest of any player in the program's history.

He earned a bid to the NCAA individual tournament but was upset in the first round by William Barker of Rice.

Higher expectations for next year

With all the success that came this year, hopes are even higher next season as the Ducks return players at their top five positions.

Along with Swinnen, Russell's squad returns two-time NCAA individual tournament qualifier Manuel Kost and 6-foot-6 Thomas Bieri. Germany's Markus Schiller and Eugene native Arron Spencer also return to next year's lineup.

Freshmen Eric Pickard and Vladimir Pino — along with two recruits Russell whom says he can't mention until they are officially signed — will fight for the No. 6 position.

"I think we're going to be a force to be reckoned with next year," Russell said. "We are a very cohesive unit and tasted a bit of the championship level, so our hunger will be that much greater."

a torn labrum in her hip that caused her to redshirt last season.

The arrival of first-year throws coach Lance Deal has been a big difference for Fuqua's health this year. The two have developed a training regimen to help avoid the injury bug.

"We first altered my technique from last year because of my hip injury," Fuqua said. "I think that's helped tremendously because the training program fits me perfectly. Usually by this time in the season, I have like 10 injuries. I think if I would have still been at Wisconsin, I wouldn't have been able to make it this long into the season."

Fatigue is a huge factor heading down the final stretch of the outdoor season that began in mid-January. With the NCAA Championships on the horizon, Fuqua said the excitement of competing on the largest stage of collegiate track and field overcomes everything else.

"If we just had a little meet coming up, I probably wouldn't be able to get too excited," Fuqua said. "But because it's nationals, the adrenaline will help out."

NCAA invites

The Oregon men's and women's track and field teams will send a total of 20 athletes to the NCAA Outdoor Track and Field Championships in Austin, Texas.

The men will send 13 athletes participating in 10 different events, including three All-America distance runners, three hurdlers, two decathletes and high jumpers, a school record 4x400 relay team and the nation's top pole vaulter.

The women will take seven athletes in six events that include the javelin school-record holder, two pole vaulters, a sprinter, a distance runner, a shot putter and a heptathlete.

Tommy Skipper, a freshman from Sandy, enters the field ranked first in the nation after breaking the Pacific-10 Conference outdoor record by one inch with a clearance of 18-10 1/4 in the pole vault. Eric Mitchum, a sophomore from Calumet City, Ill., is ranked third in the nation at the 110 meter hurdles based on his personal best of 13.50 seconds.

Sarah Malone, an All-American javelin thrower, leads the Oregon women's contingent based on her personal best and school record mark of 179-7 achieved at the Texas Relays in late March. Malone is currently ranked third in the nation behind Pacific-10 Conference rival Inga Stasiulionyte from Southern California. Kirsten Larwin, a senior pole vaulter, is ranked ninth in the nation based on her personal record of 13-6 1/4.

SPORTS BRIEF

Jackson, Poore honored by Pac-10

Oregon basketball player Luke Jackson and softball's Jenn Poore were named Pacific-10 Conference Medal Winners on Wednesday.

Two players — one male and one female — from each Pac-10 school were honored by the conference. The medals are given to the senior male and female based on performance and achievement in scholarship, athletics and leadership.

The two will be honored, along with the rest of the conference, at the 2005 Pac-10 Men's Basketball Tournament in March in Los Angeles.
